To clarify one of the paramount issues of the presidential campaign, issues of the presidential campaign, The Christian Science Monitob offers a series of 18 articles, showing the fallacy of some criticisms of prohibition, presenting some of its latest moral, social and economic aspects, recording instances of its proven worth, and giving reasons why it should be strengthened rather than modified.

One hundred and seven years ago a reporter described the spectacle as "ten-shun" that ran the long gamut of gray stretching behind Mechanics Hall and far out into the train yards, "the handsome cavalcade" which marched 200 miles and arrived in Boston looking as if it had just turned out for morning colors.

Today the corps, with its band arrived in two sections of a train which fetched them overnight from the barracks overlooking the Hudson. At 8:30 the first section poured forth a stream of young men, dressed in the honored blue gray of the army, In assailing Mr. Borah in his and hardly had the platform felt speech here. BIG MERGER OF BRITISH MINES TO AID RECOVERY

Leaders of Industry Working for Reorganization of the Mining Areas

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU LONDON-Steady progress is being made in the reorganization of the British coal industry, the latest move being a large-scale merger of at least Lancashire. The merger involves some of the most efficient mining properties in the country and will be known as Manchester Collieries, Ltd., with a probable capital of about £5,000,000. Joseph Ramsden, of the Bridgewater Collieries, will be tons a year and in good times will employ upwards of 20,000 men.

It is becoming obvious that the leaders of the coal industry are working hard to put their house in ornamental shrubbery. The fair in-order and are steadily surmounting cludes an exhibit which illustrates obstacles that have stood in the path

Uniting Marketing Groups It is generally agreed that the next important step is to assure unity between the three large marketing schemes now in operation and to bring into them the owners in Northumberland and Durham, who have not yet joined the other marketing groups.

The three marketing schemes now The three marketing schemes now in operation are the Scottish, the Five Counties (Yorkshire, Lancashire and the Midlands) and the South Wales. Meetings are taking place between the three groups and the outsiders, and hope is held out that a genuine unification of coal selling may be reached, thus putting the British coal industry on a par with that of Germany, where com-mon action is readily obtainable.

The methods adopted by the three groups are not uniform, but they are close enough to be susceptible of joint action if all the owners come in. Alfeady a number of export orders have been obtained which would have been lost if the subsidy feature of the Midlands plan had not been

Favorite Walk of George Meredith Subject of Injunction in Britain

BY WIRBLESS FROM MONITOR BUREAU LONDON-One of the favorite walks of George Meredith, the novelist, when he lived in Flint Cottage, at the foot of Box Hill, has just been the subject of an injunction suit which has been dismissed by Justice.

Tomlin in the High Court of Justice.

It was stated that Meredith was fond of walking along a path which led from Durking Road through Happy Valley and up over the hill, and the action was brought by a Pinehurst citizen against a neighbor for a declaration that there was no public right of way over the path which ran by the side of his house. It was argued that as the path was used chiefly by persons for purposes of pleasure—in going to the well-known beauty spot to gather black-berries or bluebells—it could not be a public footpath.

I From a Story by an army air pilot which appeared in the October number of the Bel-Air Progress

On numerous cross country trips North and East and on in-On numerous cross country trips North and East and on instruction and test flights in and near Clover Field, I have been able to observe, with a great deal of interest and detail, the Santa Monica Mountain foothill region lying between the Los Angeles River and the sea. I believe, in many respects, ancient Greece must have been like this region is now. Of particular interest in this section are the look and sycamore tree-studded canyons in Bel-Air and its vicinity. There is one little canyon back from the Country Club that has intrigued me and always attracts my attention. There are locations in it that seem from the air to be truly a part of Arcadia. I have found myself circling this spot on numerous occasions, it is so interesting and so unusual.

If there is one spot in the world that I have seen—and I have flown over the Philippine Archipelago, the Hawaiian Islands, over the United States and many other places—where I would like to have a little home it is in this timbered canyon near the Bel-Air Country Club. Probably those of you who have not had the good fortune to fly the air, do not know the hours of ontemplation that are possible for a pilot sailing through the akies in his ship. In my many flights over Southern California, I found myself being magnetized back to this little beauty spot in Bel-Air.

As I had seen and dreamed of this spot from the skies, I was very anxious to see it close-up. Recently I had the opportunity to drive near to this particular section, and my serial observations and dreams were fully borne out. If one loves the open, with an equal portion of sun, trees and hills, there is no place more lovely or combines so happy a blending of the handiwork of Nature and man than beautiful Bel-Air.

POWERS DECIDE EXPERTS TO FIX DEBT OF REICH

BY WIRELESS FROM MONITOR BUREAU LONDON-Winston Churchill's visit to Paris is regarded here as a step toward ending a state of things in Europe, alike financially unsatisfactory and politically dangerous. PARIS-Winston Churchill's personal support of Parker Gilbert, in an interview with Raymond Poincaré in Parls on the constitution of the commission to solve the reparations problem, took the political world by surprise. It may be regarded as certain that the powers concerned, says the Daily Telegraph, "will require very substantial definite guarantees before and merchants being called before the Chinese courts of the warlords. This is all the more necessary in view of the fact that the country is overrun by hordes of destitute soldiers, who have taken up brigandage as a profession. This has been going on for more than a century; and although presidential candidates take their chances accordingly, there frequently is an element of pathos as a condition inseparable from politics under a republic. Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, General Winfield Scott, John C. Frémont, Stephen A. Douglas, Horace Greeley, James G. Blaine, Samuel J. Tilden William Jennings Bryan-to name these is to name only a few of the national figures who have drunk the bitter draft of thwarted ambition and of dashed hopes; several of them not merely once but time after time.

The darkness of faith unrewarded, and of high air-castles finally razed to the ground, surrounds the lives of Clark and Blaine: two men, leaders in their generation, whose magic tongues and presences swayed in their favor everything except votes.

Daniel Webster the Thunderer,
Clay's contemporary, his peer in debate, possibly his superior as a thinker if not as a declaimer, like-wise went down before the resonant voice of the ballot box. And of the others, not so eminent but nevertheless as strongly moved by the be-guiling call, General Scott and Horace Greeley (both crushed by the experience) closely follow.

Even 30 years after he had gone the fond mention of the name of Harry Clay would bring a Repub-lican rally to its feet.

Yet Henry Clay, to call whom noble is no false diction, never was elected President, although in 24 years of a distinguished national career he was five times an open candidate and was twice upon the election ballots.

In 1824, when he was 47 and nad been Speaker of the House for 14 years, he was a candidate for the electoral votes along with Andrew Jackson, John Quincy Adams, the Secretary of State, and the masterly politician, William H. Crawford, ex-Secretary of War and Secretary of Here commences the quirks of for-tune which thwarted the ambition of Henry Clay; for had not the Louisiana Legislature appointed its elec-tors during the absence of several Clay members, he would have been Legislature's choice and would have topped William Crawford. In that event the house, divided be-tween Adams and Jackson, probably would have compromised upon him; for Secretary Crawford was out of the reckoning by reason of physical ALL HIGHWAY SIGNS incapacity.

Moreover, the Clay votes elected Mr. Adams. In the electoral college the states had stood, Jackson 11, Adams 7, Crawford 3 and Clay 3. In the House each state was to count as a unit, according to the plurality vote of its representatives.

As there were 24 states, 13 was the majority. Jackson needed to gain only two states from Clay or Crawford. Of the Henry Clay states, Kentucky had instructed its representatives for Andrew Jackson, and Missouri was due him through the infinite of the county and to have their signs immediately, and to have incapacity.

The article recommends that can-didates for admission to the bar first receive a limited and conditional license permitting them to practice only in those courts which are of lesser jurisdiction than the Supreme

Mr. Smith adds, "such a candidate would be entitled to apply to a charover great distances in which three acter committee for full admission and the added title of 'counsellor'." AMERICAN UNITY IS KEY TO POWER, PRESIDENT SAYS

Makes High Standards Possible, He Avers at Fredericksburg Battle Field

FREDERICKSBURG, Va. (AP)—De-livering the principal address at the dedication on Oct. 19 of the Fredericksburg and Spottsylvania County pattlefield memorial here, President Coolidge ascribed America's present prosperity and power directly to the outcome of the Civil War.

Speaking from a stand erected on the scene of the battle of Fredericksburg in 1862, Mr. Coolidge reviewed present conditions in the United tates, saying that similar prosperity and living conditions were "never before experienced by any people in human history.'

Discussing the import of the battles fought on the ground he and his listeners stood on, the Chief Executive added: "Had the decision been otherwise, we should all have been robbed of a great part of the pride try. something vastly more than an expanse of territory. It has reached the high place which it holds in the world largely because of its institutions of government.

Your devotion to their principles Your devotion to their principles dates from your pioneer days. As early as 1676 Nathaniel Bacon was asserting with armed force the spirit of those rights which were to be established by the Revolution. That spirit never faltered in Virginia. It inspired the eloquent voice of Patrick Henry. It led to the decisive action of the Williamsburg Convention in May, 1776, when it unanimously resolved to instruct its delegates to the Continental Congress to declare the United Colonies free and independent states. Accordingly, it was Richard Henry Lee who moved a resolution to that effect, and Thomas Jefferson who embodied that action in the Declaration of Independence.

It was your great soldier, George Washington, who made that declaration effective. In his other capacity, as a statesman, aided by able leaders in other colonies, but especially by Madison, he was the main cially by Madison, he was the main influence in securing the adoption of the Federal Constitution. To make that Constitution a living, vital system of national government, Virginia contributed John Marshall, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, who ranks as our greatest margistrate.

Jefferson Lauded When our Government had been established and given strength and direction under Washington, the great instrument which insured that it should forever remain dedicated to the voice of the people was again Thomas Jefferson. During the first 60 years of our Republic the presidential office was held for 36 years by Virginians. and all the armed forces which came from outside the Old Dominion, it will forever remain to your glory that our territory was won, our republican institutions were put into form, and a government resting on the sovereignty of the people was permanently established under the leadership of the sons of Virginia. No other colony put more of itself into the Federal Union or had a greater influence in the early direction of its government.

But the historic interest of this

But the historic interest of this locality is by no means confined to the creation and the formative years of our Republic. When the Nation became involved in the great tragedy which overtook it in 1861, the con-tending armies of the North and the South for long periods had opposing camps in this region where occurred some of the hardest-fought battles of the war. Near here lie the fields of Fredericksburg, of Chancellorsville, of The Wilderness, and of Spotsylvania Court House, where the heroic sons of the North and South met in mortal combat, each contending for what he thought was right as God gave him the power to see the right. Quotes From War History

The first of these engagements occurred in December, 1862, when General Burnside, sending a force across the Rappahannock, made an attack on General Lee's position, which was well protected and amply supported by artillery. Assault after assault was made by seven divisions, the one after the other, with the greatest gallantry, only to be repulsed with the most disastrous losses. In the following May of 1863 General Hooker, then in command of the Union forces, marching upstream and crossing the Rappahannock and the Rapidan, met with such resistance at Chancellorsville that his losses were over 17,000. General Lee lost about 12,500. But among these was the ablest military leader of all his generals, Stonewall Jackson, who fell through the mis-take of his own men. His loss was irreparable. Following this action General Lee led his forces north until he was turned back at Gettysburg. The next battle in this locality took place a year later, in May, 1864. General Grant was now in command of all the armies, with headquarters with General Meade, who led the

Grant sent his army across the Rapidan at two points and the Battle of The Wilderness followed, which checked his advance. After resting a few days, Grant started the Spotsylvania campaign by at-tempting to turn the right flank of Lee. Three days of desperate fighting took place in which the losses on both sides were very severe, the heaviest being around the struggle for possession of the bloody angle. It was during this battle that Grant sent his famous dispatch to Washington announcing his purpose "to fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer." With the superior forces at his command, Grant began that campaign in these two battles.

which he followed up until less than a year later it was all finally ended at Appomattox. Lee's Brilliant Leadership In these four important engagements Lee always had the smaller force. His being on the defensive and his brilliant leadership each time saved him from defeat. He always inflicted much the larger losses. On these four fields it has been estimated that the total number engaged on both sides was about 700,000. The entire casualties for both armies were close to 100,000 in about armies were close to 100,000 in about

Because of their historic interest and their valuable military lessons, the Congress unanimously passed a bill last year introduced by your Bland, to make a military park and mark and preserve the important points on these battle fields. The manimous action of the Congress unanimous action of the Congress, and the joint participation of the people both of the North and the South, in carrying into effect the law which it passed is another welcome demonstration in a long line of events, not only that the war is over, but that reconciliation is becoming complete.

amendment were added to the Constitution. Certain obscurities still remained, certain powers were still disputed and undefined. The questions of universal freedom and of whether the Constitution provided a whether the Constitution provided a temporary confederation or a perma-nent union were sure to arise. Their decision involved a most terrible and appailing sacrifice on the part of the two great contending forces.

The main reason why we can all join in the movement to commemorate the deeds of immortal valor which marked these battle fields is because we all realize that out of a because we all realize that out of a common, explation our common country has been greatly blessed. In these advantages, as it has slowly risen from its prostration, the South has more than amply participated. Since 1900 that progress has been most marked.

In the southern states alone the wealth the manufactured, the min-wealth, the manufactured, the min-eral, and the farm products, the banking resources, and the exports are of about the same value today that they were in the whole United States in 1900. The yearly production of the farms, the mines, and the mills exceeds $18,000,000, while construction contracts run about $1,000,000-,

On Spiritual Values

If it is possible to judge anything of the importance which a people set on spiritual values, or make any estimate of their intellectual attainments by what they are expending in construction of places of worship and in the support of the public schools, some idea of the progress which the South is making is re-vealed by the fact that their school costs are twice as much as those of the whole country in 1900, while on the new church buildings that cost more than $10,000 they are expend-ing $1,000,000 each week. ing $1,000,000 each week.

This day, however, is not to mark a local or sectional occasion. It is to mark a national occasion. The great deeds which we have recalled as among the glories of this Commonwealth were national deeds. The great questions which were at issue on these battle fields were national questions. Out of the decision to which they were finally brought there has been a common advantage and a comman progress which has accrued to the whole Nation. Had the decision been otherwise, we should have all been robbed of a great part of the pride which we all feel today in our country. Her achievements of the last years would have been divested of much would have been divested of much of their value and her prospects for the future would be represented to of much of their hope. Instead of one great country enjoying domestic peace and progress, holding a com-manding position in the world, we should have been a region of hostile factions, impotent at home and despised abroad. The service which we did for the cause of humanity in 1898, the world crisis in which we successfully performed our part i 1917, would all have been impossible Long since our common heritage would have been dissipated, our glory would have departed.

Growth of Country

The growth which our country has made since 1860 and the benefits it has brought all our inhabitants are unsurpassed. Our population, which was then about 31,500,000, has risen to about 118,000,000,000 is now conservatively estimated at $250,000,000,000 is now conservatively estimated at $250,000,000,000 vatively estimated at $350,000,000,000 Our foreign trade of only about $785,000,000 has now become over $9,000,000,000. Our rallroad mileage has increased from about 31,000 to about 249,000, and its revenues have grown from $153,000,000 to $6,250,-000,000. Public-school enrollment has risen from about 5,000,000 to about 25,000,000. Our manufactured products have multiplied from less than $2,000,000,000 to nearly $63,000, 000,000. In 1870 our farm products were less than $2,500,000,000, while they are now around $13,000,000,000.
These figures illustrate our progress.
So great has been our enterprise and industry that with only 7 per ent of the land and 6 per cent the population of the world, we produce over 50 per cent of the grains and basic raw materials. Many different elements have contributed to this development, but they all rest on the fundamental fact that we are a large country furnishing a large market able to consume the output of mass production. This situation has encouraged the introduction of

has encouraged the introduction of labor-saving machinery.

As the wage earner became prop-erly compensated, as he began to cost more, the incentive was in-creased to make him more skillful and more productive. One man can now take the seed from as much cotton as would have been done by 28,-000 without the cotton gin, and he can make as much yarn as would have been produced by 45,000 women on the handwheels of colonial days.

Supply of Power Needed The operation of machinery requires a supply of power. In 1869 our industries had 1.14 horsepower for each operator, who added to the raw materials furnished him less than $680 of manufactured value in a year. By 1925 these had risen to 4.3 horsepower and $3200 of value. In the machinery industry this reaches about $5200, which is about 3½ times the best that 4s done in Europe. Mechanical power has been increased until it is equivalent to the work of 3,000,000,000 additional employees in our industries, or more than 350 helpers for each of their wage earners. The scale of labor has constantly improved in importance and compensation.

A most important influence in our national progress has been the expansion and increased efficiency of transportation. Prior to 1860 railroads were in small and detached of transportation. Prior to 1860 railroads were in small and detached units built on different gauges and freight charges were rarely less than 2 cents a ton-mile. Beginning in 1869 consolidations were effected, gauges standardized, and uniformity of operation introduced, which have gradually reduced freight charges to about 1 cent a ton-mile.

Business has so much increased that passenger traffic is three times and freight six times as large as they were in 1890. There has lately been a remarkable increase in railroad efficiency. In the five years prior to 1927 the average distance traveled by a freight car was increased four-twelfths, while the proportionate consumption of coal proportionate consumption of coal was reduced two-twelfths, and onetwelfth more employees moved four-twelfths more of freight.

Producer to Consumer

The movement from producer to consumer has increased 40 per cent in rapidity. The periodic car shortages have been entirely eliminated. Goods are handled with so much care that the cost of paying for such damages has been reduced 70 per cent.

Our national expenditures and authorizations for inland waterways have run into hundreds of millions of dollars. Some of this in the Mississippi Valley has already been demonstrated to be commercially profitable. The water-borne traffic on the Great Lakes has reached the enormous total of 116,000,000 tons in a single season. Plans are being made for a deep channel waterway from the Great Lakes to the sea. Within the last 10 years one of our most remarkable improvements has been in highway construction, the expense of which has been borne in part by the states and local units of dollars. Some of this in the Mis-in part by the states and local units in part by the states and local units of government and in part by the National Treasury. More than 72,-000 miles of improved highways have been constructed, with over 222 miles of bridges, at a cost of over $1,439,000,000, of which the Federal Government has paid $633,000,000.

On rural highways as a whole over $1,000,000,000 is being expended annually. This movement for good roads, with the general use of the automobile, has greatly decreased the cost of the transporting of our production and given a mobility to our people that has expanded the whole horizon of life and brought beneficial results so great that they cannot yet be enumerated. In our airways commercial aviation already covers many thousand miles each day

Financial Structure Sound The great strength and soundness of our financial structure was dem-onstrated by the World War. Prior to that time we had been a debtor nation. During that crisis we not only furnished enormous sums to take up foreign investments here but we provided the funds for our own war expenditures, advanced nearly $10,000,000,000 to foreign gov-ernments, and have constantly sent capital abroad until the Federal Treasury and our private investors have credits there amounting to $25,-

While there are still some of our people who have not yet become participators to the extent of their merit in our material resources, and some lines which have fallen behind, we have striven to keep the door of opportunity open to all our inhabitants. Shakespeare's Country Up in Arms for Elimination of Undesirables

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU LONDON—There are now over 30 voluntary societies in England which have been established in order to help in abolishing slums. These societies are in every case offering a strictly limited dividend, and have usually adopted the system of employing trained women managers on the lines that proved to be most success ful under Miss Octavia Hill.

A typical society has been formed at Leamington, one of the wellknown English spas in Shake-speare's country. The promoters call themselves the Leamington Slum Clearance Society. This was registered as a public utility society in May, 1927. At first some of the local councilors were up in arms at the suggestion that any slum existed in an English spa, but the existence of insanitary hovels in the town could Accordingly the town council agreed that for every new house built by the society they would close a slum dwelling, provided the ciety could arrange for alternative accommodation for the occupiers. Generous persons provided over $16,-

With the money given they have built eight houses, which are now occupied by eight families, including 33 children. In most cases it was ound out of the question to remove a family direct from a slum to a new house. It was found best to discover some suitable family who could be egard train habits of cleanliness to people The who have lived under slum conditions. Aust.-The organisation of "stations" in all parts of the interior of Australia to provide food and regular work for the present wild aborigines, so that they Against Slums might be induced to forsake their nomadism, has been advocated by nomadism, has been advocated by J. Huston Edgar, a missionary from Tibet, who accompanied the recent expedition of the Aborigines Friends Association to investigate mission work in Central Australia.

Mr. Edgar described the wild naive as a blot on Australia. The expedition, he said, moved over massive ranges into Western Australia. For one stretch of 300 miles not a native was seen. On a large lake about 120 were met. Men, women and children had no idea of using skins of animals for clothing, and he formed a low estimate of their qualities.

The natives engaged in tribal fights, and one occurred while the started suddenly. Dogs began howling, women and children fied into the scrub, and, like the pattering of hail, thick sticks rained on shields, and spears flew in all directions. Eventually hostilities ceased, just as quickly as they had begun and even before the missionaries had time to interfere

Mr. Edgar declared that the wild natives of Central Australia could be made self-respecting, decent citi-zens. He said it was necessary to study their mode of life. They de-pended upon wild game and, therefore, were nomadic. There was no system of conserving game, and when the natives settled at one watercourse, they quickly frightened all the game away to another. Then the tribe moved on also. The natives had become a menace to pastoralists by destroying their stock, for which the owner had no redress. No one could erect a ring fence, and say the blacks must not pass it, because they must follow the game to shop of experiments. It is found on the frontiers which race out beyond the limits of tradition into regions uncharted. Not every generation receives the call to an æsthetic adventure, but today all eager eyes and imaginations must catch the vision of an advanced frontier in art an unmapped region blooming with fresh forms, vibrant with new rhythms, bathed in the refreshing harmonies of a new morning.

In 20th Century Taste

By HELEN JOHNSON KEYES DVENTURE lurks in the grea

When Europe was born again in the fourteenth century, art and craftsmanship labored together for one end and with undivided glory. This is happening again now, when painters and sculptors are designing furniture, textiles and objets d'art and are suffusing with a gracious quality the necessaries of daily life.

Moreover, there has arisen a new intermediary between the artist and the public, the department store. This institution, constantly multiply-ing its contacts with life at large, is, in many instances, acting as an ing and selling the work of those European countries which are among the first of the vanguard; and it is employing American designers for the invention of such modern interiors as express American habits and

This makes it a highly useful book of reference, more desirable for its compactness and moder-ate cost than the several publications in English, French and German from which it has drawn. In looking over this book with George C. Gebelein, the widely known silversmith and dealer in old silver, he found it highly commendable for the completeness and tinental Plate. These are arranged not only by countries, but by prov-inces. He finds the list of American silversmiths here to be much longer than that in any previous publication. Evidently Mr. Okie has fresh information concerning many of these names, for the dates he attaches to them differ in many cases from those n the Walpole Society volume.

Other contributions from eager inestigators are continually bringing to light fresh facts and occasionally Gebelein states that the ground has been hardly scratched for all that. He hopes that every person who can do so will see that new facts which they discover, especially concerning American silversmiths, are passed on to some expert who will properly surprising that it was the favorite christening gift both in Stuart and

in Extraordinarily Lovely Colors

A LONG with the sumptuous brocades and damasks of the 17th and 18th centuries Italy produced many delightful fabrics of a simpler but no less docorative character, which accorded well with the informal furnishings of the country villa, with old carved walnut commodes and credenze, painted rush-seated chairs and peasant faience. Among these rustic stuffs was the filaticcio woven from the silk of the slightly imperfect cocoons that could not be used for the finer fabrics. Heavy and rather rough in texture, with a mat surface that suggests a stout coarse linen, filaticcio took dyes in the most splendid fashion imaginable. One would really have to turn to old frescoes and to the paintings of the Italian primitives to find colors and combinations of color as bold, as luminous, as audaciously lovely as these.

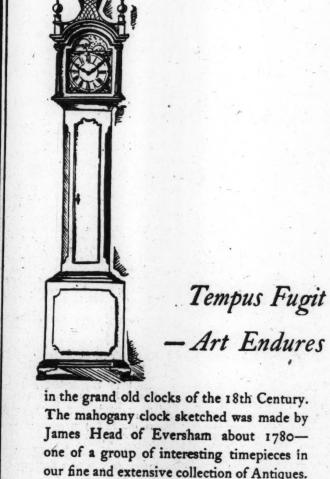

HERE are the glowing amapurples, the ambers and Indian yellows and bright tawny copper browns of an autumnal garden of cockscombs, dahlias and chrysanthemums. Some of them plain, and as satisfying in their color and texture as a good piece of old faience. Others patterned like Renaissance damasks. And still others, most numerous in the collection, bril-liantly striped in combinations of cyclamen and cobalt blue, of fuchsia and emerald, of wine color with plum and grape purples and indigos and moss and olive greens. All of them are edged with the old fringes, in many cases beautifully and elaborately knotted. They are very large and their decorative character is of a sort to set off quite as handsomely and appropriately the carved oak of a Jacobean interior as the old walnut of Italy or Spain. They may also be used with splendid effect in the coverings of sofas or chairs.

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR Des Moines, Ia. OSSIBLY no flower is making a more widespread appeal than does the tulip, for the early spring garden. As its use increases it is proving itself more and more adaptable to a variety of soil and climates. Broadly speaking, the main classes are described as early tulips, (single and double), Parrot Darwin (May-flowering) Bizarre (May-flow ering), Rembrandt (May-flowering) Breeder (May-flowering), Single

Late Cottage, and Mendel tulips. The Early Tulip, the first of the tulips to bloom, is best used in the garden as a foreground planting near the edging of a border. The stems are seldom more than six to eight inches in height. The foliage often rather thick and stalky, and the blossoms rather full and heavy.
These tulips often bloom before the snow has entirely disappeared and are a pleasing harbinger of spring are a pleasing harbinger of springs. "Chrysolora" is a lovely large, clear yellow. "La Reve" (called also, "Hobbema") is a soft, pinky rose, tinged with buff. It has a large, handsome cuplike blossom, and a firm stem. The tulip is charming when planted with "Mertensia Virginga" the native bluebell. "La "the native bluebell. "La blooms later than many va ricties of early tulips, lasting often until some of the Darwins begin to bloom. "Wouwerman" is a rich, dark violet, and "White Hawk," a chaste white. Among the double early tulips there is "Murillo," a fine white with the convictor of a foreign as with and pink, popular for forcing as well-as for bedding, also, "Prince of Orange" with a full, large flower of buff orange, and a stiff, short stem. The "Parrot Tulips" are a very small class, some of the variety look-ing like sports, and they are not offered very generally to the American trade. The Darwins Of the Darwin, there are over 100 varieties, with a color range of white, creamy and pale rose varie-100 varieties, with a color range of white, creamy and pale rose varieties, rosy and dark rosy, red and dark red, mauve and pale lilac, purple and deep violet, and maroon, black and dark brown. If choosing just a few, it is indeed difficult to make a selection, among such a wealth of beauty. The Darwins are distinguished by their long stems and stately form, as well as by their great variety of color. There are no yellow Darwins, so if one loves yellow in the spring garden—and who does not?—one must have some of the early and late varieties to furnish this color. Of the first color group of Darwins, Flamingo is a very beautiful soft pink, the blossom of exquisite form and texture. Margaret (Gretchen) is always a favorite. It is a pale silvery rose, fragile in quality. Sometimes its stem will droop a little, which only adds to its charm when it is cut and arranged with other blossoms of somewhat deeper hue.

Of the rosy and dark rosy varieties, Clara Butt is an old favorite and one of the very loveliest of the Psyche is a softer pink, chaste and delicate.

Neither pink, chaste and delicate. Neither in character nor color has it the strength of Clara Butt. But they form a pleasing contrast when used together. Mrs. Krellage is a carmine rose, a very handsome tulip. Of the red and dark red varieties, there is also a wide choice, and some glorious blossoms, are available. (If it is a man's garden, he will be sure to enjoy these.) Farncombe Sanders is a brilliant cardinal red, with a handsome white base. This is a very showy flower on a tall, sturdy stem. Pride of Haarlem is also vigorous and stately. Its color has less depth than Farn-combe Sanders. Some catalogues de-scribe it as cerise-scarlet.

Later Blooms

The mauve and pale lilac varie-The mauve and pale lilac varieties are charming when planted near the pinks. "Bleu Aimable" is a blueish heliotrope, most distinctive, and blooming later than most Darwins. "Dream" is mauve and heliotrope, of velvety texture and all that its name signifies. Of the purple and deep purple varieties, "Morales" is a rich deep violet, like the velvet purple of pansies, while "Viking" is still deeper in tone, its flower of unusual size. These purples are charming combined with the lighter mauves and soft pinks. "Faust" is an outstanding beauty among the maroon-black and dark brown varieties. It is blackish purple prown varieties. It is blackish purple with a large flower, and a strong, with a large flower, and a strong, tall stem.

For one who enjoys the exotic in a garden, or in a flower arrangement indoors, "Bizarre Tuilps" (also May-flowering) will make an appeal. These old-fashioned tulips are striped, feathered and blotched, violet, purple and black on a yellow ground. There are almost 25 varieties offered to the trade.

The "Rembrandt Tulips" include also almost 25 varieties. They are a magnificent strain of May-flowering tulips, sometimes spoken of as tulips, sometimes spoken of as "broken" Darwins. They have blotched, feathered and striped flowers, much superior to the old Bybloemen Tulips.

The Breeders and Cottage The Breeder Tulips" (May flow-ering) are an old-fashioned strain, and there are a great many charm-ing varieties offered. The colors are most unusual and among them we find a good many of the so-called art shades, bronzy-yellow, coppery-bronze, plum-violet, etc. "Apricot" is a handsome coppery bronze with a yellow center.

In the last class, Single Late Cottage (May flowering) tulips, there are about 100 beautiful blossoms from which to choose, and if one's garden plat is limited in area, it is most difficult to make a selection. The Cottage tulips usually are more delicate in form size and color than The Cottage tulips usually are more delicate in form, size and color than the Darwin and Breeders. To the contrary, however, "Boadicea" has an extra large flower, of light mahogany-brown, shaded orange-pink. "Bouton d'Or" (Ida, Golden Beauty) is a very fine clear, deep, goldenyellow, with a black center. fall planting, the matter may first resolve itself into a consideration of color. The appeal which color makes is purely a matter of personal feel-ing. One finds that the strong colors of the spectrum, clear yellow, blue and red, are most difficult to place. After a long cold winter, however, if our winter landscape has been drab, we may feel the need of strong colors to offset this drabness. It seems more fitting to use these deep, brilliant colors in the spring, when they suggest the warmth and freshness of a new seawith tumps of more vivid coloring.

Mendel tulips are a new strain, obtained by crossing Duc Van Thol tulips with Darwins and offering many new and unusual colors. Almost 20 varieties are offered and they are recommended for early forcing (December). Out of doors they are said to flower the same time as early tulips. Thus far they are very expensive. Choice Shrubs for Porch Foundations

TO THE porch foundation appropriate shrub plantings are quite as indispensable as are flower borders to the lawn. They relieve any hard angular lines and lend a softening, well-balanced and interesting effect that is, undeniably, one of the best attractions of the home. A careful selection of shrubs will bring to the premises varieties that will present a charming appearance throughout the entire year.

Since at most porches a complete and dense shady condition exists only a portion of each day, and since even those varieties of shrubs of the not strictly shady-place varieties will succeed, although partially shaded providing there is sufficient light to enable the wood to become thoroughly ripened before winter sets in, wide and satisfying choice is offered to select from. For relatively dense shade the list is even more extensive. As a basis on which to make a selection, then, one who is planning porch foundation planting might formulate the safe and simple rule of choosing from two separate groups, namely (Group 1), the shady-place varieties, and (Group 2) those succeeding best in partially sunny and exposed situations.

Group 1

Enkianthus Japonicus: This dwart growing shrub is particularly charm-ing in the autumn when its small foliage assumes a brilliant orange-marked-with-red coloring, a sharp and striking contrast to black berrylike fruit. In early spring numerous umbels of pure white Andromeda-like flowers come, offering cheery messages of spring.

Albia Chinensis Grandiflora: Of exceedingly graceful habit is this small foundation shrub. Its shiny dark green foliage sets off to advantage the small white, lilac-tinted, heather-like flowers. It blooms untiringly throughout the summer and early fall and its foliage, hardy, in-trepid, stays on weeks after winter

Cotoneasters: These lovely ever-greens combine beautifully with the deciduous shrubs and are especially desirable on account of their grace-ful habit of growth, their neat ever-green foliage and gay fruits. Both the Francheti and the Horizontalis are charming species. The Francheti puts out long gracefully arched branches, foliaged light green, amongst which orange-yellow berries glow warmly. The Horizontalis is low growing, dwarfish, of dark green foliage. In the autumn the leaves go crimson, scarlet fruits come, and there is satisfying color deep into the Berberis Thunbergi: Planted ir-regularly 18 inches apart, with a few plants of the Azalea Amoena dotted here and there in front, Berberis Thunbergi produces a beautiful ef-fect. It is perfectly hardy in almost any locality.

Azalea Amoena: This is indeed a little gem, evergreen in the latitude of Philadelphia and southward. In late spring the plants are all cheerily aglow with rosy-crimson flowers. Verruculosa (Warty Barberry): A handsome spreading barberry with shiny-leaved foliage, light green above, glacous underneath, turning in winter rich red and bronze tones. Spring gives it bright yellow flowers, fall lustrous violet-black fruits. It is best planted in a protected place. Hydrangea Arborescens Grandi-flora (Snowball Hydrangea): A hardy American shrub 4 to 8 feet tall; its leaves are bright green, flowers creamy-white, generally with a few sterile rays borne in numerous flat-topped clusters in early summer and lasting until fall.

Group 2

Hydrangea Paniculata Grandiflora is a charming shrub to set at the open corners of a low porch where there is not much distance between there is not much distance between the floor of the porch and the ground, as it is not impatient at pruning and can be cut back to within three eyes of the previous season's growth. This, of course, should be done in the early spring. It is undoubtedly the most popular variety of hydrangea and one of the showlest shrubs in cultivation. The great composite flower heads are built up of innumerable flat marbuilt up of innumerable flat marginal florets. When fully expanded the lacy panicles are snow-white but soon take on stunning tones of bronze on the exposed sides.

Dutzias Gracilis: A small shrub rarely exceeding two feet tall, with slender, often arching, branches set thickly with attractive bright green leaves 1 to 2 inches long. The leaves are interestingly rough on the upper

Here, a high type of music under consideration, I had to grant the force of Mr. Murray's comment

The Economic Side

In regard to Mr. Engles, I found him, the day I saw him in the glint mahogany, preferring to sustain the cause with words; and inasmuch as what he said referred to the economic side of radio performance, illumination was unnecessary. During his career hitherto in the field of management, he has been beset by a large number of youthful sopranos, tenors, baritones, violinists, violoncellists and pianists who were keen to make their fortune in the concert

THE MAGIC FIRE SPELL, painted for the STEINWAY COLLECTION by N. C. WYETH

It is generally conceded that in the Fire Music from "Die Walkure" Wagner attained a new level of orchestral tone-painting. The writhing, whistling flames, the glittering sheets of fire burn quench-lessly in this immortal score. It is unquestionably one of the supreme achievements of program music.

This gracious comedy of the Court of Navarre, even in the revised form of Navarre, even in the revised form in which it has come down to us, still whose beauty and grace win, also Mine for the eyes quick-garnering contains twice as many rhymed lines as blank verses; it includes three sonnets and a song, and is interspersed as well with doggerel, with alternating rhymes and with sixlined stanzas. How crude it was, as a play, and yet how full of potential matter, none knew better than him-self; for, later on, when a "mellowed occasion" called for such another court-comedy, its author, as was his way with immature work, went back to "Love's Labor's Lost," recasting line after line into his new fantasy, which he called "A Midsummer-Night's Dream," and substituting for the classical presentation, by Holofernes and his friends, of "The Nine Worthies." another burlesqued classical tragedy, done by six clowns, with Bottom, the weaver, replacing the schoolmaster, who, almost beyond question, was intended for none other than George Chapman, Shake speare's rival poet of the earlier sonneteering days.

Chapman's name it is that gives the best clue to Shakespeare's intention in this comedy of "Love's Labor's Lost," which, at bottom, scarcely deserves the name of a stage play, but rather of a topical revue; its author relying, for his success, not upon plot, of which there is almost none, nor upon genuine characterization, of which there is very little, but upon lyric poetry, song, and dance, and, still more, upon verbal coruscations, and topical allusion, and satire—especially those two lastwith which, in their most fanciful shapes, the scenes sparkle throughout. In those early days, when his genius was first blossoming into exuberant, and many-sided, vitality, young Shakespeare, with equal daring and delight, spares neither man nor woman, be they courtier, kitchen-maid, or queen. The wench, Jacquenetta, may be based upon some country servant-girl, whose track the dramatist once crossed; but when Costard exclaimed, for the first time (III:1), "O, marry me to one Frances," it is certain that a chuckle, or—if the Queen were not present in person—a loud laugh ran through an audience, that saw therein, at once, a jest at Majesty herself, whose negotiations, for hand, in marriage, of Francis, Duke of Alencon, were a great topic at the English Court, just about the time wherein the beginnings of this comedy are set; in which connection it is pertinent also to remember that Armado's page, Moth, who takes part in the skipping dialogue, bears the name (La Mothe) of the French Ambassador to London, officially charged with the marriage business. "Do you mean a lovely house or a lovely home?" The Passer-By admitted the discrimination was a just one. And then he was surprised again, as the old man smilingly quoted a stanza of Victor Hugo's:

A house is built of brick and stone, Of tiles and posts and piers, But a home is built of loving deeds That stand a thousand years.

He nodded pleasurable agreement with the sentiment, but the old gentleman plunged still deeper.

"What do you think I cherish best about this place? Not the loveliness of scene that you see stretching out before you. No! no! Not the picture of the house and its material environ-ment. He stands there, warm in the January sunshine. There are two feet of earth below him, then an arch, then the hollow of a cistern. Men built that arch-men and donkeys. It away, and some of that earth came Of sunset o'er the world's metropolis, in layers, borne by the wind, by the Whose nearing spires, whose multi-rain, and settled over their handiwork. A donkey stands there now eating the weeds and looking far away. Somehow the arch of the cistern, the layers of earth, the weeds, appear transitory, almost accidental. The donkey and the mountains across the water seem to have been there longest. They seem to belong there by ancient right, like the sea and the sky.

Of course, you ought to see the Punic Museum when you visit Car-thage—and the Amphitheater. Spe-cialists in archæology can learn a great deal from either. Others can be benefited by the exercise, walking even practice charity, and their French, upon the guide. But if you go into the museum, you must leave the sunlight, the mountains, and the sea outside. And perhaps it is as well for one or two of the ignorant, who are not archæologists but only people, to stand with the donkey, by water to the mountains beyond.

By means of what refining prohibitory laws, or by means of process does the Christ take away education and moral suasion, comes the sin of the world, when apparently from the universal longing for there is as much wickedness at one higher culture and refinement in time as at another? In Christian human ways, and from an individual Science we learn that it is a sense and innate desire to attain perfection of sin that needs to be taken away, and to understand God and spiritual and that evil is destroyed by the man. When the Psalmist observed understanding of God, good; that all the people of his time longing after sin and suffering are thus destroyed. and working for material pleasures, In "Science and Health with Key to he turned his thought to God and the Scriptures" (pp. 476, 477) Mrs. said, "As for me, I will behold thy Eddy says: "Jesus beheld in Science face in righteousness: I shall be the perfect man, who appeared to satisfied, when I awake, with thy him where sinning mortal man aplikeness." Business has continued steady at high levels this week, with most indices pointing upward.

The crop outlook, the earnings statements of corporations and the expansion of wholesale trade are exercising a favorable influence on sentiment. Developments in the textile industry have constituted another favorable factor in the general business situation.

Buying on a larger scale than has been noted for some time has been requirements from six to eight weeks ahead serving as an impetus to trading. The trend of prices also has been encouraging, having stiffened considerably.

While curtailment still is in effect for some lines of goods and surplus stocks are reported, in other lines the demand has been so heavy that for forming the prompt shipment a premium is being offered.

Steel mills continue operations at a steady pace, the market being featured by railroad buying. Western mills are reported to be most benefited by the rail demand. Operations at Chicago are running at about 85 per cent.

The steel trade the country over is enjoying favorable conditions. Both in point of business booked and rate of production. October promises to be the peak month. Prices have been tested at their high levels, and a confidence in the present market evidently is established.

Automobile Output High

A rate of output ar in excess of the usual fourth-quarter level is being maintained in the automobile industry. The demand for cars and trucks continues heavy. Some makers of low-priced cars have large back orders from dealers, while in the medium-priced field orders are sufficient to keep the majority of manufacturing plants busy until the end of the year. Recent reports from oil companies. Cr. in whose field a gradual improvement has been noted during the year, show noteworthy gains in earning power.

Measured by the volume of check payments, business in the week ended Oct. 13, though showing a decline from that of the previous week, was considerably larger than in the corresponding week of 1927.

The general index of wholesale prices averaged higher in that week in than in either the preceding week or the corresponding week of last year.

Car loadings in the week ended Oct. 6 totaled 1,186,598 cars, a gain of 83,604 over the similar week in 1927. As compared with the corresponding week of 1926, also, a gain was shown.

World Stocks 100,000,000 Bushels Above Year Ago-Corn Prices Firmer

RCIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Russia is still a minus quantity as an exporter, and later in the season this may be a factor in the situation, but at the present time the abundance of supplies in sight seems to preclude any material advance, although it is generally conceded that prices are low enough to stimulate generous and even wasteful consump-

Low grade wheats in Canada are and helps to ease a decidedly streng feed grain situation on the other side. Price changes in wheat have not been great this week, as local selling is easily overdone, while the demand does not follow the bulges to any extent. laying the curing of corn and set back the movement appreciably. It was also due in part to a progressive tightening of the cash corn market, with rapidly reducing stocks, and firming of premiums for old corn.

All the No. 2 yellow corn taken on delivery in July has been sold and most of the white corn, while the stocks of mixed corn also are now ight. The total visible at the end of last week was only 3,313,000 bushels, most of which was at Chicago.

Foreign news was bullish, Argentine markets being strong, while export buying is of liberal proportions. A large amount of new corn has been booked for export, and it was reported late in the week that Gulf exporters were bidding more for corn down state than were Chicago houses. Argentine shipments were about 3,000,000 bushels less than a year ago, and Black Sea shipments were practically nothing.

The drastic changes in managerships The drastic changes in managerships in the majors during the past three or four years has been due to several factors. In the first place, the clubs came to the conclusion that playing-managers did not meet with as great success as bench managers. From seven playing managers in 1926, the number dwindled to Hornsby of the Braves and Harris of the Senators in 1928. A good player-manager is ex-

A Word a Day

Indorse

Both literally and etymologically, this word means "on the back" (Latin in, on, and dorsum, back), and refers in the first place to the writing of a signature or memorandum on the back of a document.

This primary meaning is not, however, sufficient to take in the whole thought of the word today, for one may "indorse a movement," indicating aimply that one backs it and is willing to give it his support.

In both in-dorse' and en-dorse', as the spelling is preferred in England, the final syllable is emphasized. The sounds as in mill, the e as in orb. (The first e in endorse sounds as in Saying "Thank You" BUSINESS man's family was Away, and thus the curtains in his office were not changed as regularly as they were when his wife was in the city to look after such details. As the weeks went on the curtains got darker and dingier.

One morning he was astonished to find clean white curtains hung at his windows. So far as he knew, no one else, not even his wife, had a key to his office.

Happening to stay an hour later than usual one evening soon there-after, he heard a key turn in his door, saw the door open, and there stood a scrub woman. He had forgotten she had a pass key. He told her about the curtains and asked her if she could help him solve the mystery. This was what she said: "You probably don't know that you've ever seen me before. But when you've passed me in the hall you've always given me a pleasant smile, or a kind word. In this way you've often made it easier for me to get through my work. When I saw your curtains so dirty, I realized there must be some reason why they remained so day after day, so I took them home one night, washed them, and brought them back the next morning early, so you wouldn't miss them. It's just a way of saying: 'Thank you, sir.'"

FINDING a new avenue of service, many Rotary Clubs and similar organizations have brought much happiness to the children of their communities in providing outings for them. A happy occasion of this kind is related in a contribution from Mrs. M. G. G. of Red Deer, Alberta, Can. The Rotary Club of that place took 112 children, whose parents did not own motorcars, for an outing at Sylvan Lake, 14 miles distant. To many of the children it was their first glimpse of the lake, and after a happy day of boating and swimming,

He then produced his reserve can of gasoline, and seeing no funnel was available, his wife quickly made one from the cover of a hat box. Economy and Expansion

CPEAKING yesterday at the dedication of the Fredericksburg and Spottsylvania County Battle Fields Memorial, President Coolidge almost casually refuted the imputation recently made that the claim in behalf of his administration that it had effected appreciable economies is deceptive if not actually false. The President rightly takes it for granted that the American people have approved the program of industrial expansion upon which the country has entered during the last decade. They regard as deposits to their credit the public funds invested in permanent highways, in inland waterways for the transportation of the products of farms and factories, and similarly the money paid in liquidation of the national debt. It is because of this that they are quick to question the sincerity of one who, knowing the facts, consciously seeks to deceive or mislead the uninformed.

President Coolidge, while refraining from any discussion of political or partisan issues, stated that in the last ten years there have been built in the United States 72,000 miles of improved highways and many miles of substantial bridges. The total estimated cost of these improvements, according to the figures quoted by him, is $1 .-439,000,000, of which the Federal Government has paid $633,000,000. To this he adds several hundreds of millions paid by the national Government for improvements and extensions of inland waterways.

The beneficiaries of these improved systems of travel and transportation, country-wide in their extent, will be slow to charge those who have been responsible for this policy of expansion with wastefulness or improvidence. They, like all other reasonable persons, will realize that the economical expenditure of money for those facilities and utilities which reduce the costs of transportation is neither wasteful nor extravagant. In making up the national balance sheet the sums so invested fall naturally upon the credit side of the ledger.

While the President's incomplete array of figures is convincing and conclusive in a degree, it remained for Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, to supply complete refutation of the charge that actual economies have not resulted during the Coolidge Administration. Mr. Mellon directed himself specifically to the statements made by Governor Smith, the Demoeratic candidate, in his speech delivered at Sedalia, Mo., on Tuesday. His defense is interposed not only in his own behalf, but in behalf of his undersecretary, Ogden L. Mills, and General Lord, Director of the Budget. All three were personally arraigned by Governor Smith on the charge of carrying on a deliberate campaign of misrepresentation.

Secretary Mellon, at the outset, observes that "economy is not just saving, but wise spending; the elimination of waste; the promotion of efficiency and businesslike methods; the building up of a sense of responsibility to the taxpayer on the part of public servants; the careful management of the Government's finances, by a policy of steady debt reduction with consequent relief from the heavy burden of interest charges." From this he argues, and with sound logic, that under such a definition expenditures might actually increase from year to year and yet the Nation receive an economical and businesslike administration of its public affairs.

Every business executive and plant manager in the United States realizes that the cost of profitable and efficient operation in business and industry is increasing year by year. But these business men do not regard expenditures thus made as wasteful or improvident. Neither do they regard derisively the practical economies which contribute, even in a small way, in keeping down the mounting overhead. Mr. Mellon, in commenting on so-called Coolidge economies, now practiced in all departments of the Government, may perhaps remind the New York Governor of the observation made by an illustrious predecessor who attained the Presidency, that "public office is a public trust." Yet Mr. Mellon proceeds to show that despite the economic expenditure of sums necessary for public improvements, to say nothing of the vast totals appropriated for the care and relief of veterans of the World War, the burden borne by taxpayers has been appreciably lightened. But Mr. Mellon does not attribute to his critic a desire to misrepresent or falsify the facts. He is considerate enough and charitable enough to concede to him the benefit of misconception or misunderstanding. The Governor declared that the charges made by him comprised an indictment from which he had nothing to subtract

"Drinking Children"

MODAY, as of yore, parents have a responsibility. There is an enemy of their children abroad—an enemy shorn of much of its power, but still lurking in dark corners. Liquor, even under prohibition, remains liquor, the old enemy. Its indulgence leads to disaster today, as formerly. Example and education are weapons in the hands of parents against it; but there is another, and sometimes neglected, weapon: parental authority.

A vacillating attitude on the part of parents toward youthful indulgence; self-justification for a lack of authority, based upon the so-called modern revolt against discipline; halfway positions regarding obedience to the laws of the land; open criticism of the law, which young ears are all too prone to catch and adopt; too great a willingness to leave the moral and ethical instruction of children to teachers and preachers and soap-box orators, rather than to the friendly family intercourse about the hearthstone—all these are typical of the ways in which well-intentioned but thoughtless parents sometimes evade their responsibilities. .

And, in extenuation for the grave offense against the youth of today either willingly or unknowingly perpetrated by such grown-ups as shirk their parental duties, let no one presume to assert that the law, which is designed to free the fathers and mothers of America from the sad spectacle of drinking children, is responsible for the degradation of young people who are not taught to respect that law.

As Daniel A. Poling, president of the Interna-tional Society of Christian Endeavor, recently recommended, "Let those of us who are older stop slandering America's sons and daughters and, while we watch our own steps, give to them a good example and the inspiration of our

Out of their great love for their children. responsible parents exercise proper authority over their children for the protection of their children.

The Southern Democrats

THE embattled Democrats of the once Solid South are to be congratulated. Weeks ahead of the actual election they have demonstrated their power by compelling a Democratic presidential nominee, for practically the first time since the Civil War, to turn his attention to their territory and to carry to such states as Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee his appeal for support. The opinion is widespread that some states of this once politically impregnable region will this year break away from their ancient allegiance to the Democratic Party by repudiating the candidate who started the fashion by bolting the Democratic platform. But even should this not be true, what has already been accomplished gives assurance that the "Solid South," in the sense in which that phrase has been used in the past, is no more.

Never again will a coalition of representatives of the Tammanies and imitation Tammanies of the northern states dare to force upon the protesting South a nominee offensive in every particular. Never again will the phrase be heard before a Democratic 'national convention, "the South'll take what we offer. It will have to!' Already the independent, clear-thinking men in practically every state of the South have made their determination to resist so vocal and so terrifying to the northern oligarchy which has seized upon the party, that the Smith leaders are employing every form of political cajolery and coercion to coax or to force them back into line. When in the memory of living man has the Democratic National Committee found it necessary to send money to states like Virginia, North Carolina, or Florida? When did the northern Democrats before this year find it expedient to put a southern man on the presidential ticket? When, prior to 1928, has the South had the opportunity to listen to a Democratic candidate for President pleading for its votes?

Hitherto the support of the southern states has been taken as a fact assured at the start. The common phrase has been that its people would vote for a yellow dog on the Democratic ticket. But now, even in Texas, the proportions of the revolt against the nominee who stands for the repudiation of the party's record on so vital an issue as prohibition have put the State in jeopardy. As for such commonwealths as Alabama, North Carolina and Florida, where the growing independence of opinion within Democratic ranks has long been apparent, the candidate and the issues of this campaign bid fair to destroy the old-time Democratic majorities. It is rather a desperate errand Smith has undertaken in crossing the Mason and Dixon's Line in search of support. And some of those who accompanied him on his recent visit to the dry states of the middle West are not inclined to think that his new adventure will result in much profit to his candidacy.

British Columbia's Open Door

THE new provincial administration of British Columbia is reported to be exploring land areas throughout the Province available for settlement. According to Premier Tolmie of British Columbia, plans are being prepared for co-operation with British authorities to place groups of settlers from Great Britain in suitable farming districts.

Under the Empire Settlement Act, passed by the British Parliament in 1922, an annual appropriation of £3,000,000 for a period of fifteen years is available to assist British families to settle on land in the dominions. Canada has benefited by this appropriation, particularly in carrying out a plan for the settlement of 3000 families on farms owned by the Dominion Government. With the Dominion treasury sharing in the cost, advances have been made to settlers for a twenty-five-year period with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. The actual settlement work has been administered entirely by Canadian authorities, and official reports indicate that the British settlers for the most part are succeeding admirably. British-born settlers seem to have done equally as well as Canadianborn on any class of land, whether improved or

Since Lord Lovat, British Undersecretary of State for the Dominions, visited Canada during the recent summer months, the report has been current that plans are being considered for an extension of the settlement project to place another 20,000 British families on the land. Capital for initial settlement purposes, including the cost of erection of buildings, clearing and development of land, purchase of stock and equipment, would be furnished by the British Treasury. Supervision and general administration of the plan in Canada would be carried out by the thoroughly competent land settlement branch of the Department of Immigration and Colonization. The provinces would participate by making available suitable land for settlement. British Columbia evidently is getting ready to make an early bid for British families under the proposed plan. The British authorities have satisfied themselves that there are many suitable districts in the Pacific coast province within reasonable distance of railways and markets. Systematic settlement of Canada with British families would be mutually beneficial to the Dominion and to the United Kingdom.

Italy's Influence in the Balkans

TTALY is steadily and surely increasing her influence and power in the Balkan peninsula. She is unceasingly scoring victories over her chief rival in that part of the world, France. The Tirana pact between Albania and Italy, signed nearly two years ago, and later followed by a supplementary agreement between the two countries, was a decided gain for Rome. The ratification of the Nettuno agreements by the Parliament at Belgrade during the month of August this year was another step forward for Italy and consolidated her position along the Dalmatian coast, which is part of Jugoslavia. The conversion of the Republic of Albania into a monarchy, with Ahmed Zogu, Italy's protégé, as King, was another point for Mr. Mussolini. Likewise, the outcome of the recent cabinet crisis in Bulgaria, as a result of which General Vulkoff remains as Minister of War, is unquestionably to the advantage of Italy. General Vulkoff is friendly to the Macedonians, who are very close to Italy. His remaining in the Bulgarian Cabinet is very advantageous to Italian interests. It is plain that the influence of Italy in Bulgaria is growing.

One of the cardinal points of difference between Italy and France is the question of who shall dominate the Balkans. France backs Jugoslavia; Italy backs Albania and Bulgaria, and to a certain extent Greece and Turkey. In this international game of great importance for the whole of Europe, Italy is doing most of the scoring at present.

Audiences and Players

RCHESTRAL audiences: which one of all that may be enumerated can claim the highest rating? This question supersedes, perhaps, that which used to be asked, Which orchestra stands first? More explicitly, which of the many groups of subscribers that support symphony concerts in Europe and America shows the keenest discernment for good performance and interpretation; and exerts, accordingly, the strongest influence on the conductor, to build up his powers, and on the players, to improve their technical mastery?

In America, the inquiry presents itself with especial force just now, when people are reassembling in their places in auditoriums, to learn what Beethoven and Schubert have to say from the standpoint of 100 years ago, and what Strauss and Respighi have to tell them from that of today. By opinion of one sort, the effect of the telling depends for the larger part upon the talent and disposition of a man who makes motions with a baton, and for the remaining part upon the discipline and acquiescence of men who draw a bow up and down across strings, or who blow into a tube of wood through a reed, or of brass through a mouthpiece. By other judgment, the composer's message secures publication in no such merely objective manner and from no such purely mechanistic source.

To consider origins, wherever sound may have been elicited, anciently, from the hollow of a gourd, from the stem of an oat-straw or from the coiled chamber of a conch-shell, it became music only when it struck upon someone's ears and awoke someone's sensibilities. In the glow of the hearth, in the shade of the beech tree or in the sun and wind of the strand, there had to be persons listening. Then, to come to an era of perfected instruments, affairs cannot, after all, have essentially changed. Though a trained executant playing the violin, the oboe or the horn takes the place of the witless vagabond who filled hut, grove and cove with primitive tone, music is something craved by the hearer, rather than something imposed by the performer.

Solo airs or elaborately organized sonorities, music is called out of the silences here to a greater purpose, there to a smaller. Orchestrally, where does it happen with the most significance in the United States-Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Minneapolis, San Francisco or Los Angeles? If the community to which the honors ought to go could, by fair process be indicated, if the audience of highest rating could, without displeasure anywhere, be pointed out, then at once might be named also the group of symphonic artists that stands Number One.

Thomas A. Edison—An Appreciation

lamp. Coming abreast of such a milestone along its crowded path, a preoccupied world pauses to express its gratitude to that man without whom modern conditions of progress would seem to have been impossible of attain-

Thomas A. Edison has commonly been referred to as "wizard," and so he has appeared to the uninitiated. Yet men have too easily imagined that this "wizard' worked his astonishing works with the effortless gesture of a Jupiter grasping in his fist the thunderbolts of heaven. On the contrary, Mr. Edison's accomplishments are the fruits of his energy, combined with his genius. An early episode of his career sounds the keynote for all the busy years to follow.

One day when, a young man, he was working as a tele-graph operator in Boston, Mr. Edison bought at a secondhand bookshop a complete set of Michael Faraday's books on electricity. A companion of those days, called Adams, has described how Edison reached their lodging with the books at four o'clock in the morning, read steadily through the remainder of the night, then ran all the way to his breakfast in Hanover Street, a mile away, "Adams," he panted, "I have got so much to do, and life is so short, that I am going to hustle."

1 1 1 It is from this standpoint precisely that Mr. Edison has carried on his experiments. He possesses an enormous capacity for work. He has labored incessantly and has expected his fellows to keep pace with him. On one occasion, when he and his men had a particularly large and demanding order to fill in a short time, he is said to have locked the men into a room for sixty hours. As for himself, he has indulged in no hobbies and few holidays; he can do with remarkably little sleep; his rest has been found in change of work. Nothing has been permitted to divert him from his stupendous tasks on behalf of an unheeding world.

The boy Edison went to school for only a few weeks. Much he learned from his mother, even more he learned from books. He has had an insatiable appetite for learning, combined with the faculty of knowing how to find things out for himself. And whatever he learned he put immediately to the test. One of his biographers, George S. Bryan, records that, not many years ago, Mr. Edison laughed boyishly as he exclaimed: "Say, I have been mixed up in a whole lot of things, haven't I?"

Anecdotes of his early career are striking in their virility, whether he is shown as a market gardener, aged eleven years; as a newsboy selling 1500 papers on credit just after the Battle of Pittsburgh Landing; as a young investigator setting up his laboratories in his mother's cellar or in the baggage car of the train on which he sold his papers; or as an expert telegraph operator whose speed and accuracy were altogether amazing.

No matter where young Edison was, nor what he was doing, he had time and energy to perfect such instruments as he was using. He could never leave off experimentation, for he was convinced that people should be enabled to do their work more quickly and more easily. Sometimes his experiments brought him recognition, more often not; his employers had not his vision and, naturally, they thought the young man was wasting their time and his own.

Mr. Edison was still a young man, only twenty-six, when he found himself at the head of an experimental laboratory at Newark, N. J., where he was directing 300

THIS month of October, 1928, marks the forty-ninth his laboratory was moved to Menlo Park, N. J., then anniversary of the invention of the incandescent again in 1887 to West Orange. Startling discoveries followed close upon each other's heels. At one time, in the Newark laboratory, forty-five of Mr. Edison's inventions were being developed together. Always he could turn from one to another freely, without delay in mental adjust-

Taking it by and large, more time and more study entered into the invention of the electric light than into any other single task. Mr. Edison has maintained that, with reference to the incandescent lamp, he never made an actual discovery, that his contribution was invention pure and simple. For he took what others had worked out, improved upon it, perfected the processes, utilized and adapted to his own purposes whatever knowledge had been established by others. In the end, the results had been made his own. It was, then, after some thirteen months of ceaseless experimentation and the expenditure of $40,000 that at last one of his lamps continued at incandescence for forty hours. It happened on Oct. 21,

On the following New Year's Eve was held that famous public exhibition at Menlo Park, for which special trains carried from New York City about 3000 incredulous spectators. One and all stood gaping at the sight of a multitude of tiny brilliant lights, suspended on wires which were stretched between branches of the trees. Many were those who applauded; many who scoffed. Mr. Edison was little moved by these evidences of their sentiments, for he alone realized how much there was to be done before his invention could be perfected for the

Any man in the street can enumerate the inventions which are owed to the genius of Thomas A. Edison, though indeed a person might omit certain of them through sheer familiarity. It is comparatively safe to credit them all to Mr. Edison. For between June, 1869, and June, 1910, he applied for 1328 patents, that is to say, one patent for every eleven days. During the Great War he made many inventions at the instigation of the Government, and he is still at work at West Orange. He is just as absorbed in his task today as he was when, summoned to the City Hall for the payment of certain back taxes, he took his place obediently in the line, but could not remember his name. He is just as delighted with the results of his labors as when he carried the first phonograph triumphantly into the offices of the Scientific

Think of the motion picture-of what it means alone in the field of education. Think of the electric railways and the electric power stations everywhere. Think of the typewriter and the dictaphone. Contrast two photographs of Broadway, New York City, in 1890 and today, if you would understand what it means to have electric wires underground. And what may we not expect even yet from the mentality of such a man? If Mr. Edison is 'the most useful American," as he has been called, it is first of all because of his unselfish desire to benefit humankind. Only a short time ago he said: "I haven't any conclusions to give; I am just learning about things myself."

President Coolidge, upon this notable anniversary, is delivering to Mr. Edison a message of congratulation by radio from Washington. What emotions must this circumstance alone not arouse in Mr. Edison's thought! The voice of the President swiftly ringing across all those empty miles! It is for just such a possibility as this that he has offered his years of patient labor. Consistently he has dealt not with things, but with thoughts; he has striven men along such lines of research as he pointed out. Thus, untiringly to facilitate the transmission of human comparatively early, he had come into his own. In 1876 thoughts.

From the World's Great Capitals-Paris

PARIS AN ASTONISHING question has been posed: In the course of 200 years, has England moved farther away from the Continent of Europe? Is the English Channel widening? There are skeptics. On the other hand, then, if this is not the case, the precision of astronomical instruments must have increased during that time, for Paris has just been found to be five meters farther away from London than the distance established in the reign of Louis XIV. The bureau des longitudes of the French Government, by calculations made with the aid of stars, has now stated that the difference of longitude Paris-Greenwich is not 9 minutes 20 and 93-hundredths seconds, but instead 9 minutes 20 and 95-hundredths seconds. This correction of two-hundredths of a second adds some five meters to the distance between the Paris observatory and the initial meridian of Greenwich.

La Rue du Chat-qui-Pêche is the narrowest street in Paris, and none will dispute it. A thinner little street would surely be difficult to find; this one, near the Seine, slips between walls scarcely an arms' width apart. Its name is quaint enough, too, to give it notoriety: the Street of the Cat Who Fishes-which leads us to say that Paris is a city of many quaintly named streets. The Street of the Wooden Sword, the Street of the Four Sons, the Street of the Three Crowns, The Street of the Ladies' Tower, Street of the Swan, Equality Street, Felicity Street, Street of the Festivals, Street of the Feuillantines (a kind of light pastry), Street of the Mule's Pace, Street of the Wolf's Breach, Street of the Flowered Basket, Street of the Quails' Mound, Passage of the Monkeys, and the Street of the Summit of the Alps are among the street names which both Parisian and foreign visitors remark with amusement or questioning. 1 1 1

On a hill in Lorraine, exposed to the four winds, has been erected a monument to Maurice Barrès, the great writer. He it was who before the war did most to keep before French thought the conviction that Alsace and Lorraine were inseparably a part of France. During the war he served with his pen the cause of the indivisibility of French unity. Apart, therefore, from the charm of his writing, Maurice Barrès represents to French people the illustrious example of a man devoted to the country from which he sprung. The hill is called "La Colline Inspirée, after the book of that title. "Les Déracinés" and "Colette Baudoche" were other books which strove especially, and with consummate strength and lyrical beauty, to keep burning the French fires in the hearths of Alsace and Lorraine.

American women have undertaken the restoration of a quaint house of the sixteenth century which stands in the town of Châtillon-sur-Seine. It is an exceptionally fine example of the architecture of that period. The house is to become a place where Roman relics unearthed in the neighborhood will be exhibited. For years excavations have been undertaken by an eminent archæologist, M. Lorimy, and his discoveries have aroused much interest in this country. So rich was his field of work and so carefully has he pursued his labors, that it is claimed this house at Châtillon will eventually be unique in its collection of Roman objects left on Gallic soil.

. . . . At this autumn time, when the leaves on the trees are turning gold, the forest is a thing of magnificence. A poet has demanded that placards be posted in Paris reminding the public that such a wonder of nature is to be seen in this or that forest not far from the city. This prompted an adjoining announcement from a leading newspaper that the "Association nationale et industrielle du bois" had taken the decision to organize woodland festivals before winter came. According to ancient Gallic tradition, the forest is a holy thing. The effort, therefore, will be to recall to parents and children the beauty and usefulness of trees and the need of caring for them and perpetuating them. This is all part of a movement of reforestation. Trees were ruthlessly cut down during the war, and new forests are much needed in this country. 1 1 1

An art critic of Paris, familiar not only with the Louvre Museum, but also with the National Gallery in London, has made a comment on the care of paintings which is worth noting. He has observed how much cleaner those of London are than those of Paris. This was due he remarked, to the custom in the former capital of covering the pictures with glass so as to isolate them completely from contact with the outer air. You will notice at the Louvre, on the other hand, that only a few paintings are protected this way, such as, for example, the celebrated "Mona Lisa" of Leonardo da Vinci. Works do seem to deteriorate and darken much too rapidly in the Louvre and many today are in need of cleaning. The use of glass, at least on all the smaller paintings, would, in the opinion of this critic, check this process of loss of original coloring.

One of the outstanding characteristics of the French people is their sense of humor. No one lives among them ong without being impressed with the procession of festivals held each year and with the manifest joy of the populace in them. One of the strangest and most amusing of these has just taken place; it is called the Fêtes des Caf' Con—abbreviated from "cafés concerts" which are the concerts given in rollicking mood on the unpretentious stages of cafés. Music-hall artists, chorus girls, midinettes, and saleswomen took part in the show, which was held in the open at the Buffalo Vélodrome. Races were run, circus turns were given, and donkeys were ridden. The participants were free to clothe themselves as they wished, and some of the costumes, especially for the races, were exceedingly incongruous. Large crowds gathered to watch this typically French buffoonery.

Mrs. Willebrandt's Speeches

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: No clear thinker can accuse Mrs. Willebrandt of religious prejudice in her recent clean-cut speeches be-fore certain Methodist and Presbyterian conferences, Nowadays the place where an address is delivered is of little consequence, since all the world hears it or reads it. She makes it perfectly plain that she is opposed to Governor Smith's candidacy, not because of his religion, but because he is sachem of Tammany Hall and a friend of liquor—two negative forces which always have typified, and always will typify, corruption and low ideals. Who is better qualified than Mrs. Willebrandt to speak on this subject? Is she not Assistant Attorney-General, in charge of prohibition enforcement? occasions she has discovered how difficult it is to enforce the law in hostile territory like New York City, Tammany Hall does not want the law enforced. Let us also remember that there is now a law in New York State which, in effect, will not permit of any state aid in enforcing the dry law and throws the whole burden on the federal authorities. Governor Smith and Tammany were strongly behind this action. Therefore Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt is speaking —as the head of the prohibition enforcement department should—to defend the Eighteenth Amendment against the strongest assault that has yet been made upon it, against its greatest foe, lest, by a lack of alertness, this man should be elected to the position from which he could overthrow all the good work of the last ten years. Now is the time for decisive speech and action to protect this great work and to promote the success of this noble "moral experiment," as some are pleased to call it.

Should the Republican campaign headquarters muzzle Mrs. Willebrandt for being too outspoken? I sincerely hope not. She expresses herself splendidly, and tells the truth.

BORAH CALLS SMITH RECENT TARIFF CONVERT

Robinson Also Changed Views for Campaign, He Declares

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (A)-William E. Borah, Senator from Idaho charged Gov. Alfred E. Smith with gain support for his Democratic Presidential candidacy.

Armory, the Senator declared that Herbert Hoover always had been an advocate of the protective tariff as a defense of the high American standards of living and wages.
"But Governor Smith announced for the first time in Louisville," Senator Borah said, "his conversion to protection, that great principle of Republicanism."

Mr. Borah said that Governor Smith in 1924 had renounced the protective system and in a speech had termed that policy "a cold-blooded holdup of the plain people of the United States." Senator Robinson, the Democratic Viceopposed the protective tariff in his enatorial career, Mr. Borah added.

GOVERNOR AND MAYOR MAKE GIFTS TO CORPS

Cadets' Invasion of City Is First Since 1821 When It Marched 200 Miles

For the first time since August. 1821, when they marched here afoot from the fortressed Plains of West Point, the United States Military Academy Cadet Corps invaded Boston today.

One hundred and seven years ago reporter described the spectacle as "the handsome cavalcade" which marched 200 miles and arrived in Boston looking as if it had just turned out for morning colors.

Today the corps, with its band arrived in two sections of a train which fetched them overnight from the barracks overlooking the Hudson. At 8:30 the first section poured forth a stream of young men, dressed in the honored blue gray of the army, and hardly had the platform felt the beat of their boots when the second section was in, platoons were formed and the march into the center of the city began. Happy Time for "Plebe" There are provisions in the Manial of Conduct for the corps for such a trip. The fourth classman, the "plebe," may turn back the cape of his coat, and there is nothing to distinguish him in the public eye and, for a little proud interval in his own mind, from the upper classman. The restriction on the "brace" is relaxed too; the brace which, to the braced like steel, shoulders squared rigidly and chin drawn stiffly in. But for these and the other variations of ruling there was nothing in the line that suggested any relaxation from the rigidity of all typical West farthest fringes of the Boston Common Parade Ground people began early to mass themselves; by 8:30 100,000 must have gathered, and when the first notes of the cadet bugles sounded from the turn of Dartmouth Street into Beacon, an-

50,000 or 75,000 joined them. Children were everywhere, apparently well informed of the length of time since Boston had seen such a spectacle, eager to see the tradi-tional splendor of the West Pointer on parade. There was some talk among the crowds of the prospect for the outcome of the afternoon's football game, but mostly it was of the more immanent parade of "The

Relayed Cries of "Ten-shun"

Shortly after 9:15, at a bugle call rom the band, and relayed cries of 'ten-shun" that ran the long gamut of gray stretching behind Mechanics Hall and far out into the train yards, the cadets started their swing down crowd-lined Huntington Avenue, into a Copley Square almost packed solid, along a Darlmouth Street in which people pushed out almost into he line of march, and finally into Beacon Street and on toward the It was at Mechanics Hall, however, hat the real behind-the-scenes ac tion of the parade took place. Here the cadets debarked from the four long sections of Pullman that had carried them from the Point. Here was the only spot where the almost stolid dignity and the impeccability of dress, so apparent as they marched in review, was not assumed. As the cadets filed from their Pullmans there were small pirouettings, while one man saw that his brother's cape was correctly flattened down, his overcoat without a wrinkle. Little bits of exuberant horseplay, snatches of greeting in the jargon of West Point, in which the parade became the "p-rade" and H Company became "H Co." were seen and heard upon the stone flaggings of the train-platform that entirely vanished later. As the band struck up the air that was to cadence the steps of the cadets in their march there was a cheer from the packed crowds gathered about the starting point that was to be caught up and continued along almost the entire line of march.

A cheer upon a cheer rolled up from the crowd; Governor Fuller stepped three or four paces forward from the line which also held Dwight F. Davis, United States Secretary of War, Lieut.-Gov. Frank G. Allen, Mayor Malcolm E. Nichols and others; faces became stern with admiration and appreciation for the tremendous background of corps his-tory as the line thickened, took on substance and length, and moved across the parade ground before

Fluttering over the line at intervals were the black-lettered gold and gray company pennants of the Cadet Corps. The lines moved on . . . 1200 pairs of feet beat an all but soundless before the reviewing

A peculiar silence hung over the crowds; they watched and some re-membered relatives and friends made forever illustrious by membership in the corps. There was a brief colloquy among cadet officers and six advanced across the unoccupied stretch of parade ground to receive for the corps gifts of spear heads from Governor Fuller in the name of the Commonwealth, and of a Jue silk flag of the city of Boston from Mayor Nichols.

A movietone apparatus recorded accompanying remarks that to the bystander were mere motions of lips. First Cadet Captain Bruce Douglas Randlaub, appointed from North Dakota, took the blue leather boxes in their dull red cloth covers from the Governor's hands, and the flag that was so different a blue from the blue of his cape, and passed them to the men of his staff and the six turned away and rejoined the corps on the distant post.

The band sounded bugles and the corps began to march again, lines left, lines right, eyes right, as feet purred momentarily over the grass and the sound was gone before another line, eyes right, moved into and past the place they had yielded. Line a Blue Blur

The line of the corps suddenly was a blue blur in the mounting line of Beacon Street. Down to the Cambridge Subway it moved, there to entrain again in cars held especially for the purpose, for Cambridge.

Hir from the AIR

From a Story by an army air pilot which appeared in the October number of the Bel-Air Progress

THINK many people are interested to see Bel-Air from the air. Certainly it is a novel way. It is very educational, and holds many Surprises.

On numerous cross country trips North and East and on instruction and test flights in and near Clover Field, I have been able to observe, with a great deal of interest and detail, the Santa Monica Mountain foothill region lying between the Los Angeles River and the sea. I believe, in many respects, ancient Greece must have been like this region is now. Of particular interest in this section are the oak and sycamore tree-studded canyons in Bel-Air and its vicinity. There is one little canyon back from the Country Club that has interioring me and always strates on a strenging. There are locations. intrigued me and always attracts my attention. There are locations in it that seem from the air to be truly a part of Arcadia. I have found myself circling this spot on numerous occasions, it is so interesting and so unusual.

If there is one spot in the world that I have seen-and I have flown over the Philippine Archipelago, the Hawaiian Islands, over the United States and many other places—where I would like to have a little home it is in this timbered canyon near the Bel-Air Country Club. Probably those of you who have not had the good fortune to fly the air, do not know the hours of contemplation that are possible for a pilot sailing through the skies in his ship. In my many flights over Southern California, I found myself being magnetized back to this little beauty spot in Bel-Air.

As I had seen and dreamed of this spot from the skies, I was very anxious to see it close-up. Recently I had the opportunity to drive near to this particular section, and my aerial observations and dreams were fully borne out. If one loves the open, with an equal portion of sun, trees and hills, there is no place more lovely or combines so happy a blending of the handiwork of Nature and man than beautiful Bel-Air.

QUEBEC SYSTEM FUTILE AS CURB ON HARD LIQUOR

Theory That Wine and Beer Plan Aids Temperance Proved Untenable

To clarify one of the paramount issues of the presidential campaign, The Christian Science Monitor offers a series of 18 articles, showing the fallacy of some criticisms of prohibition, presenting some of its latest moral, social and economic aspects, recording instances of its proven worth, and giving reasons why it should be strengthened rather than modified.

The following article, the ninth in the series, presents the latest results of first-hand investigation as to just how the systems of liquor sale and control in Canada work, and furnishes a basis for judging the worth of the proposal that a similar system be adopted in the United States, Another article on the Canadian system will appear

With such a sale permitted (which the Ontario liquor commissioner has just decided to banish in the sister province) it would seem hard to make out a case in favor of "promotng light wines and beers.'

Quebec is proud of its governmentrun liquor system, just as a small municipality might be proud of a city-run power plant. In Ottawa, across the provincial ne, liquor advertising is forbidden; in Hull every billboard tells of some superior brew. In Ottawa a license is needed to get a drink; in Hull no such regulation is made. In Ottawa the liquor is carried home and consumed; in Hull it is drunk in the public "tavern" (frequently equipped with swinging doors and shuttered saloon windows). In Quebec Province, the French-speaking, French-Canadians are the dominant element.

They consider the Ontario ban on public drinking almost as prepos-terous as prohibition itself. It must always be emphasized that the dominant population of Quebec is not Anglo-Saxon, and has a totally dif-ferent way of looking at many social

The Quebec law says that only one bottle of ardent spirits, or "hard liq-uor," may be sold at a time. But it does not prevent a customer go-ing in and out of a shop with a new bottle as many times as he pleases. This is the mellow way in which the indulgent government exercises its so-called control! WHITE RENEWS HIS ATTACK ON SMITH'S RECORD

Votes in New York for Saloons Stressed by

INDEPENDENCE, Kan. (AP)-Another bitter attack on Governor Smith's allegiance to Tammany Hall was delivered here by William Allen White after the Emporia author and editor had defended himself against Democratic charges that his own utterances proved him "unreliable and erratic" in political discussion.

Speaking at a gathering sponsored by the Kansas Republican central committee, Mr. White reepated his charges that the Democratic presidential nominee as a member of the New York Assembly had served Tammany Hall by voting for bills favoring the saloon

The New York Governor's recent explanation of his record as a legislator, Mr. White declared, was "all specious, and all twisted to the Tammany viewpoint." And he asserted Governor Smith "reveals himself the perfect flower of Tammany who does not dare, because he cannot, appeal

In a statement Mr. White replied to a series of questions put to him by the Third Kansas Congressional District Democratic Committee and published as an advertisement here with the announced object of showing him to be inconsistent in his support of Herbert Hoover and Senator Curtis of Kansas, the Republican standard bearers.

Calls Questionnaire Silly The editor characterized the questionnaire as "silly." He denied he ever spoke disparagingly of either Republican candidate. The questionnaire was prefaced with the statement that "no one takes you seriously in politics, but we do enjoy hearing you talk and reading your fiction."

Mr. White in his answer declared.

"the Democratic press has taken isolated phrases out of their context and garbled them; that's all there is to that." 'In his defense of his record more

He justified that vote by saying that a majority of the assemblymen voted against it, not explaining that to make that majority he was voted with a solid Tammany block along with a few Republicans—a branded tiger cub in

"He does not in any of the long roll call lists discuss the moral im-plications of the bills. Never once does he explain his vote for the saloon upon the ground of reason or conscience. . .

Smith Defends His Votes

"When it was proved that he voted to keep the saioons open after mid-night in small towns, his defense was peculiarly a Tammany defense. Yet it was not made 20 years ago, but less than 60 days ago when he declared in voting to open saloons after midnight, he was representing his constituents... And because the liquor interests wanted more profits from the laboring men, Governor Smith, not 20 years ago but now, declares that his vote was a good one A long list of explanations like this make up his defense of that Tammany record.

Mr. White said the discussion of Governor Smith's legislative record was "not to pretend that any moral turpitude lurked in these votes," but to prove "how Tammany contami-

President Coolidge spoke as follows:

My fellow Americans:

No one who loves our country and is sufficiently interested to make even a slight examination of our history could visit this locality without feeling that he is close to great characters and great events. From early colonial times down to the present hour men who have lived and wrought in this section of Virginia have cast a mighty influence over the course of the affairs of this Nation. They have been a race who led in carving out this Republic and establishing its institutions, who believed in local self-government, and loved liberty.

from outside the Old Dominion, it will forever remain to your glory that our territory was won, our rethat our territory was won, our republican institutions were put into form, and a government resting on the sovereignty of the people was permanently established under the leadership of the sons of Virginia. No other colony put more of itself into the Federal Union or had a greater influence in the early direction of its government.

But the historic interest of this

But the historic interest of this locality is by no means confined to the creation and the formative years of our Republic. When the Nation became involved in the great tragedy which overtook it in 1861, the con-tending armies of the North and the South for long periods had opposing camps in this region where occurred some of the hardest-fought battles of the war. Near here lie the fields of Fredericksburg, of Chancelforsville, of The Wilderness, and of Spotsyl-vania Court House, where the heroic sons of the North and South met in mortal combat, each contending for what he thought was right as God gave him the power to see the right.

Quotes From War History The first of these engagements occurred in December, 1862, when General Burnside, sending a force across the Rappahannock, made an attack on General Lee's position, which was well protected and amply supported by artillery. Assault after assault was made by seven divisions, the one after the other, with the greatest gallantry, only to be repulsed with the most disastrous losses. In the following May of 1863 General Hooker, then in command of the Union forces, marching up-stream and crossing the Rappahan-nock and the Rapidan, met with such resistance at Chancellorsville that his losses were over 17,000. General Lee lost about 12,500. But among these was the ablest military leader of all his generals, Stonewall Jackson, who fell through the mistake of his own men. His loss was irreparable. Following this action General Lee led his forces north until he was turned back at Gettys-burg. The next battle in this locality took place a year later, in May, 1864 General Grant was now in command of all the armies, with headquarters with General Meade, who led the Army of the Potomac.

Grant sent his army across the Rapidan at two points and the Battle of The Wilderness followed, which checked his advance. After resting a few days, Grant started the Spotsylvania campaign by at-tempting to turn the right flank of Lee. Three days of desperate fight-ing took place in which the losses on both sides were very severe, the heaviest being around the struggle for possession of the bloody angle. It was during this battle that Grant sent his famous dispatch to Washington announcing his purpose "to fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer." With the superior forces at his command, Grant began that campaign in these two battles which he followed up until less than a year later it was all finally ended

at Appomattox. Lee's Brilliant Leadership

In these four important engagements Lee always had the smaller force. His being on the defensive and his brilliant leadership each time saved him from defeat. He always inflicted much the larger losses. On these four fields it has been esti-mated that the total number en-gaged on both sides was about 700,-The entire casualties for both armies were close to 100,000 in about 10 days of actual fifighting. Those who fell sleep here, near where sleeps the mother of Washington. Because of their historic interest and their valuable military lessons.

the Congress unanimously passed a bill last year introduced by your distinguished Representative, Mr. Bland, to make a military park and mark and preserve the important points on these battle fields. The unanimous action of the Congress, and the joint participation of the people, both of the North and the South, in carrying into effect the law which it passed is another welcome demonstration in a long line of events not only that the works of events, not only that the war is over, but that reconcillation is be-coming complete.

The Union which this Commonwealth did so much to establish, the Union hallowed by the name of Washington, the Union which Jackson defended with a fervor no less pronounced than that of Lincoln. the Union which took a new place in the world under Wilson, is not accorded a loyalty in any other part of our Republic more devoted and sin-cere than that which is constantly manifest in the life of the people of

Virginia. Progress of Race

As we look over the course of history, as we give it more and more consideration, our confidence in consideration, our considered in mankind cannot but increase. The more we contemplate their actions, the more we learn of their motives, the more we are convinced that on the whole they attempt to do the best that they can under the circumstances in which they find themselves. The progress of the race has been long and hard and toilsome, marked by many mistakes and rebeen long and hard and toilsome, marked by many mistakes and requiring many sacrifices. It never goes forward but one step at a time. When we set up our Republic on the foundation of liberty under the law, much of the best thought both of the South and the North realized that the structure was incomplete. amendment were added to the Constitution. Certain obscurities still remained, certain powers were still disputed and undefined. The questions of universal freedom and of whether the Constitution provided a temporary confederation or a permanagement. temporary confederation or a perma nent union were sure to arise. Their decision involved a most terrible and appalling sacrifice on the part of the two great contending forces. The main reason why we can all join in the movement to commemorate the deeds of immortal valor which marked these battle fields is because we all realize that out of a common expiation our common country has been greatly blessed. In these advantages, as it has slowly risen from its prostration, the South has more than amply participated. Since 1900 that progress has been most marked.

In the southern states alone the wealth, the manufactured, the mineral, and the farm products, the bankoral, and the farm products, the bank-ing resources, and the exports are of about the same value today that they were in the whole United States in 1900. The yearly production of the farms, the mines, and the mills ex-ceeds $18,000,000,000, while construction contracts run about $1,000,000-

On Spiritual Values

If it is possible to judge anything of the importance which a people set on spiritual values, or make any estimate of their intellectual attainments by what they are expending ments by what they are expending an construction of places of worship and in the support of the public schools, some idea of the progress which the South is making is revealed by the fact that their school costs are twice as much as those of the whole country in 1900, while on the new church buildings that cost more than $10,000 they are expending $1,000,000 each week.

This day, however, is not to mark a local or sectional occasion. It is to a local or sectional occasion. It is to mark a national occasion. The great deeds which we have recalled as among the glories of this Commonwealth were national deeds. The great questions which were at issue on these battle fields were national questions. Out of the decision to which they were finally brought there has been a common advantage there has been a common advantage and a comman progress which has accrued to the whole Nation. Had the decision been otherwise, we should have all been robbed of a great part of the pride which we all feel today in our country.

Her achievements of the last years would have been divested of much of their value and her prospects for the future would have been devoid of much of their hope. Instead of one great country enjoying domestic of much of their hope. Instead of one great country enjoying domestic peace and progress, holding a commanding position in the world, we should have been a region of hostile factions, impotent at home and despised abroad. The service which we did for the cause of humanity in 1898, the world crisis in which we successfully performed our part in 1917, would all have been impossible. Long since our common heritage would have been dissipated, our glory would have departed. glory would have departed.

- Growth of Country

The growth which our country has made since 1860 and the benefits it has brought all our inhabitants are unsurpassed. Our population, which was then about 31,500,000, has risen to about 118,000,000. Our wealth of about $16,000,000,000 is now conservatively estimated at $350,000,000,000. vatively estimated at $350,000,000,000. Our foreign trade of only about $785,000,000 has now become over $9,000,000,000. Our railroad mileage has increased from about 31,000 to about 249,000, and its revenues have grown from $153,000,000 to $6,250,-000,000. Public-school enrollment has risen from about 5,000,000 to about 25,000,000. Our manufactured products have multiplied from less products have multiplied from less than $2,000,000,000 to nearly $63,000,000,000. In 1870 our farm products were less than $2,500,000,000, while they are now around $13,000,000,000.

These figures illustrate our progress.

So great has been our enterprise and industry that with only 7 per cent of the land and 6 per cent of the population of the world, we pro-duce over 50 per cent of the grains and basic raw materials. Many dif-cept the grain have contributed in ferent elements have contributed to this development, but they all rest on the fundamental fact that we are a large country furnishing a large market able to consume the output of mass production. This situation has encouraged the introduction of

has encouraged the introduction of labor-saying machinery.

As the wage earner became properly compensated, as he began to cost more, the incentive was increased to make him more skillful and more productive. One man can now take the seed from as much cotton as would have been done by 28,000 without the cotton gin, and he can make as much yarn as would can make as much yarn as would have been produced by 45,000 women on the handwheels of colonial days.

Supply of Power Needed The operation of machinery requires a supply of power. In 1869 our industries had 1.14 horsepower for each operator, who added to the raw materials furnished him less than $680 of manufactured value in a year. By 1925 these had risen to 4.3 horsepower and $3200 of value. In the machinery industry this reaches about $5200, which is about 3½ times the best that is done in Europe. Mechanical power has been increased until it is equivalent to the work of 3,000,000,000 additional employees in our industries, or more employees in our industries, or more than 350 helpers for each of their wage earners. The scale of labor has constantly improved in importance and compensation. and compensation.

A most important influence in our national progress has been the expansion and increased efficiency of transportation. Prior to 1860 railroads were in small and detached units built on different gauges and than 2 cents a ton-mile. Beginning in 1869 consolidations were effected, gauges standardized, and uniformity of operation introduced, which have gradually reduced freight charges to about 1 cent a ton-mile.

Business has so much increased that passenger traffic is three times and freight six times as large as they were in 1890. There has lately been a remarkable increase in railroad efficiency. In the five years prior to 1927 the average distance traveled by a freight car was increased four-twelfths, while the proportionate consumption of coal was reduced two-twelfths, and one-twelfth more employees moved fourtwelfth more employees moved four-twelfths more of freight.

Producer to Consumer

The movement from producer to consumer has increased 40 per cent in rapidity. The periodic car shortages have been entirely eliminated. Goods are handled with so much care that the cost of paying for such damages has been reduced 70 per cent.

Our national expenditures and authorizations for inland waterways have run into hundreds of millions of dollars. Some of this in the Missispipi Valley has already been demonstrated to be commercially profitable. The water-borne traffic on the Great Lakes has reached the enormous total of 116,000,000 tons in a single season. Plans are being made for a deep channel waterway from the Great Lakes to the sea. Within the last 10 years one of our most remarkable improvements has been in highway construction, the expense of which has been borne in part by the states and local units of government and in part by the National Treasury. More than 72,000 miles of improved highways have been constructed, with over of dollars. Some of this in the Mis-

000 miles of improved highways have been constructed, with over 222 miles of bridges, at a cost-of over $1,439,000,000, of which the Federal Government has paid $633,000,000.

On rural highways as a whole over $1,000,000,000 is being expended annually. This movement for good roads, with the general use of the automobile, has greatly decreased the cost of the transporting of our production and given a mobility to our people that has expanded the our people that has expanded the whole horizon of life and brought whole horizon of life and brought beneficial results so great that they cannot yet be enumerated. In our already covers many thousand miles each day.

Financial Structure Sound

The great strength and soundness of our financial structure was dem-onstrated by the World War. Prior onstrated by the World War. Prior to that time we had been a debtor nation. During that crisis we not only furnished enormous sums to take up foreign investments here but we provided the funds for our own war expenditures, advanced nearly $10,000,000,000 to foreign governments, and have constantly sent capital abroad until the Federal Treasury and our private investors. Treasury and our private investors have credits there amounting to $25,-When the currency system of the strength of our Federal Reserve System were so great that we not only kept our own currency on a gold basis and our own exchange at par but were able to furnish large credits to other nations to stabilize their currency and support their exthange.

These are some of the facts which indicate the progress and prosperity of the United States. While there are still some of our people who have not yet become participators to the extent of their merit in our material resources, and some lines which have fallen behind, we have striven to keep the door of opportunity open to all our inhabitants. It is true that the accumulations that are taking place would lose much of their value unless their benefits were widely dis-tributed among the great mass of our people. We have individuals of great wealth, and shall continue to great wealth, and shall continue to have so long as men are free and enterprise and ambition exist, but the large fortunes in this country are substantially all invested in dif-ferent ways of serving the public. Some of the largest have all been transferred to charity.

Savings Have Doubled

The millions of our people who are investors in securities, the $27,-500,000,000 of deposits in savings institutions, which have more than doubled in nine years, the $7,200,000,000 of assets of building and loan associations, which have more than trebled since 1919, the widespread individual, ownership of homestead individual, ownership of homestead individual ownership of homesteads, the possession of 23,000,000 motor vehicles, of which 20,000,000 are passenger cars, the general use of the telephone and radio, the constantly increasing rate of wages even when the price of commodities has been declining, and the general standard of living never before experienced by any people in human history all testify that under our free institutions and equality of op-portunity the distribution of wealth is solving itself in accordance with natural laws.

A device known as the "osiso," with which time variations almost to the millionth of a second can be measured, will be the instrument with which these studies will be made. This device was invented by Joseph W. Legg, oscillograph engineer of the Westinghouse company. The experiments will be made under the direction of M. P. Hanson, radio en-

While it was found that some so "blind" spots are caused by peculiarities of land configuration, this cannot explain all of them. In 20th Century Taste

By HELEN JOHNSON KEYES

DVENTURE lurks in the great shop of experiments. It is found on the frontiers which race out beyond the limits of tradition into regions uncharted. Not every generation receives the call to an æsthetic adventure, but today all eager eyes and imaginations must catch the vision of an advanced frontier in art an unmapped region blooming with fresh forms, vibrant with new rhythms, bathed in the refreshing harmonies of a new morning.

When Europe was born again in the fourteenth century, art and eraftsmanship labored together for one end and with undivided glory. This is happening again now, when painters and sculptors are designing furniture, textiles and objets d'art and are suffusing with a gracious quality the necessaries of daily life.

Moreover, there has arisen a new intermediary between the artist and the public, the department store. This institution, constantly multiply ing its contacts with life at large, is, in many instances, acting as an educator. It is importing, exhibiting and selling the work of those European countries which are among the first of the vanguard; and it is employing American designers for the invention of such modern interiors as express American habits and

The absence of date symbols and dealing with Continental Hall four-volume German publication dealing with Continental Hall marks, other than French, is typical of this class of reference books.

Sir Charles Jackson has done a similar service for England and Ire-land. The Walpole Society pub-

This makes it a highly use-ful book of reference, more desirable for its compactness and moderate cost than the several publications in English, French and German from which it has drawn. Its title is "Old Sfiver and Old Sheffield Plate," by Howard Pitcher Okie. The publishers are Doubleday, Doran & Co., and the price is $15.

In looking over this book with George C. Gebelein, the widely known silversmith and dealer in mendable for the completeness and the arrangement of marks on Continental Plate. These are arranged not only by countries, but by provinces. He finds the list of American silversmiths here to be much longer than that in any previous publication. Evidently Mr. Okie has fresh information concerning many of these them differ in many cases from those in the Walpole Society volume.

Other contributions from eager inestigators are continually bringing to light fresh facts and occasional Gebelein states that the ground has been hardly scratched for all that. He hopes that every person who can do so will see that new facts which they discover, especially concerning American silversmiths, are passed on to some expert who will properly surprising that it was the favorite christening gift both in Stuart and record them.

Antique Filaticcio Bed Covers

in Extraordinarily Lovely Colors

△ LONG with the sumptuous brocades and A damasks of the 17th and 18th centuries Italy produced many delightful fabrics of a simpler but no less docorative character, which accorded well with the informal furnishings of the country villa, with old carved walnut commodes and credenze, painted rush-seated chairs and peasant faience. Among these rustic stuffs was the filaticcio woven from the silk of the slightly imperfect cocoons that could not be used for the finer fabrics. Heavy and rather rough in texture, with a mat surface that suggests a stout coarse linen, filaticcio took dyes in the most splendid fashion imaginable. One would really have to turn to old frescoes and to the paintings of the Italian primitives to find colors and combinations of color as bold, as luminous, as audaciously lovely as these.

HERE are the glowing ama-ranth and fuchsia reds and purples, the ambers and Indian yellows and bright tawny copper browns of an autumnal garden of cockscombs, dahlias and chrysanthemums. Some of them plain, and as satisfying in their color and texture as a good piece of old faience. Others patterned like Renaissance damasks. And still others, most numerous in the collection, bril-liantly striped in combinations of cyclamen and cobalt blue, of fuchsia and emerald, of wine color with plum and grape purples and indigos and moss and olive greens. All of them are edged with the old fringes, in many cases beautifully and elaborately knotted. They are very large and their decorative character is of a sort to set off quite as handsomely and appropriately the carved oak of a Jacobean interior as the old walnut of Italy or Spain. They may also be used with splendid effect in the coverings of sofas or chairs.

A Roll Call of Dutch Tulips

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR Des Moines, Ia. OSSIBLY no flower is making a more widespread appeal than does the tulip, for the early spring garden. As its use increases it is proving itself more and more adaptable to a variety of soil and climates. Broadly speaking, the main classes are described as early tulips, (single and double), Parrot Darwin (May-flowering) Bizarre (May-flowering), Rembrandt (May-flowering), Breeder (May-flowering), Single Late Cottage, and Mendel tulips.

The Early Tulip, the first of the tulips to bloom, is best used in the garden as a foreground planting near the edging of a border. The stems are seldom more than six to eight inches in height. The foliage is often rather thick and stalky, and the blossoms rather full and heavy. These tulips effen bloom before the the blossoms rather full and heavy. These tulips often bloom before the snow has entirely disappeared and are a pleasing harbinger of spring. "Chrysolora" is a lovely large, clear yellow. "La Reve" (called also, "Hobbema") is a soft, pinky rose, tinged with buff. It has a large, handsome cuplike blossom, and a firm stem. The tulip is charming when planted with "Mertensia Virginica." the native bluebell. "La ginica," the native bluebell. "La Reve" blooms later than many va-rieties of early tulips, lasting often until some of the Darwins begin to bloom. "Wouwerman" is a rich, dark wiolet, and "White Hawk," a chaste white. Among the double early tulips there is "Murillo," a fine white and pink, popular for forcing as well as for bedding, also, "Prince of Orange" with a full, large flower of buff orange, and a stiff, short stem.

The "Parrot Tulips" are a very small class, some of the variety look. ing like sports, and they are not offered very generally to the American trade.

Of the Darwins

Of the Darwin, there are over 100 varieties, with a color range of white, creamy and pale rose varieties, rosy and dark rosy, red and dark red, mauve and pale lilac, purple and deep violet, and maroon, black and dark brown. If choosing just a few, it is indeed difficult to make a selection, among such a wealth of beauty. The Darwins are distinguished by their long stems and stately form, as well as by their great variety of color. There are no yellow Darwins, so if one loves yellow in the spring garden—and who does not?—one must have some of the early and late varieties to furnish this color. Of the first color group of Darwins, Flamingo is a very beautiful soft pink, the blossom of exquisite form and texture. Margaret (Gretchen) is always a favorite. It is a pale silvery rose, fragile in quality. Sometimes its stem will droop a little, which only adds to its charm when it is cut and arranged with other blossoms of somewhat deeper hue.

Of the rosy and dark rosy varieties Clara Butt is an old favorite of the rosy and dark rosy varieties, Clara Butt is an old favorite and one of the very loveliest of the true pinks; one might say of it that it is one of the very best varieties of all the Darwins. It is a brilliant rosy pink, with a very long, strong stem, which may bend to the sun quite readily, thus adding grace and charm to its blossoms. Psyche is a softer pink, chaste and delicate. Neither in character nor color has it Neither in character nor color has it the strength of Clara Butt. But they the strength of Clara Butt. But they form a pleasing contrast when used together. Mrs. Krellage is a carmine rose, a very handsome tulip. Of the red and dark red varieties there is also a wide choice, and some glorious blossoms are available. (If it is a man's garden, he will be sure to enjoy these.) Farncombe Sanders is a brilliant cardinal red, with a handsome white base. This is a very showy flower on a tall, sturdy stem. Pride of Haarlem is also vigorous and stately. Its color has less depth than Farncombe Sanders. Some catalogues degribe it as cerise-scarlet. ribe it as cerise-scarlet.

Later Blooms

The mauve and pale lilac varieties are charming when planted near the pinks. "Bleu Aimable" is a blueish heliotrope, most distinctive, and blooming later than most Darwins. "Dream" is mauve and heliotrope, of velvety texture and all that its name signifies. "Euterpe" is a dencate shade of lilac-mauve, paler at the edges, and "Rev. H. Ewbank" is a pale hellotrope-lilac with a margin of gray.

Of the purple and deep purple varieties, "Morales" is a rich deep vio-iet, like the velvet purple of pansies, while "Viking" is still deeper in tone, its flower of unusual size. These purples are charming combined with the lighter mauves and soft pinks. "Faust" is an outstanding beauty among the maroon-black and dark brown varieties. It is blackish purple with a large flower, and a strong.

tall stem.
For one who enjoys the exotic in a garden, or in a flower arrangement indoors, "Bizarre Tulips" (also May-flowering) will make an appeal. These old-fashioned tulips are striped, feathered and blotched, violating the problem of the control of the cont et, purple and black on a yellow round. There are almost 25 varie-ies offered to the trade. The "Rembrandt Tulips" include also almost 25 varieties. They are a magnificent strain of May-flowering utilips, sometimes spoken of as broken. Darwins. They have blotched, feathered and striped flowrs, much superior to the old By-loemen Tulips.

The Breeders and Cottage

The "Breeder Tulips" (May flow-ring) are an old-fashioned strain, and there are a great many charm-ing varieties offered. The colors are most unusual and among them we find a good many of the so-called art shades, bronzy-yellow, coppery-bronze, plum-violet, etc. "Apricot" is a handsome coppery bronze with is a handsome coppery bronze with a yellow center.

In the last class, Single Late Cottage (May flowering) tulips, there are about 100 beautiful blossoms from which to choose, and if one's garden plat is limited in area, it is most difficult to make a selection. The Cottage tulips usually are more delicate in form, size and color than the Darwin and Breeders. To the contrary, however, "Boadicea" has an extra large flower, of light mahogany-brown, shaded orange-pink. "Bouton d'Or" (Ida, Golden Beauty) is a very fine clear, deep, goldena very fine clear, deep, golden-ellow, with a black center. "Mrs. Keightley" (Gesneriana lutea pallida), one of the few fragrant tulips, is primrose yellow. "Mrs. Moon" is a fine flower and one of the best of the late yellow tulips. "Retro flexa" is much like a llly in form. Its petals are pointed and turned gracefully back, its color a bright yellow. "Vitellina" is cream colored. "The Fayn" is dove colored. colored. "The Fawn" is dove colored, quiet in tone, and charming to use with tulips of more vivid coloring.

Mendel tulips are a new strain obtained by crossing Duc Van Thol tulips with Darwins and offering many new and unusual colors. Almost 20 varieties are offered and they are recommended for early forcing (December). Out of doors they are said to flower the same time as early tulips. Thus far they are very expensive. Their color,

Choice Shrubs for Porch Foundations

TO THE porch foundation appro- flowers creamy-white, generally with priate shrub plantings are quite as indispensable as are flower borders to the lawn. They relieve any hard angular lines and lend a softening, well-balanced and interesting effect that is, undeniably, one of the best attractions of the home. A careful selection of shrubs will bring to the premises varieties that will present a charming appearance throughout the entire year.

Since at most porches a complete and dense shady condition exists only a portion of each day, and since even those varieties of shrubs of the not strictly shady-place varieties will succeed, although partially shaded providing there is sufficient light to enable the wood to become thoroughly ripened before winter sets in, a wide and satisfying choice is rarely exceeding two feet tall, with offered to select from. For relatively slender, often arching, branches set offered to select from. For relatively dense shade the list is even more extensive. As a basis on which to make a selection, then, one who is planning a porch foundation planting might formulate the safe and simple rule of choosing from two separate groups, namely (Group 1), the shady-place varieties, and (Group 2) those succeeding best in partially sunny and exposed situations.

Group 1

Enklanthus Japonicus: This dwarf growing shrub is particularly charmgrowing shrub is particularly charming in the autumn when its small foliage assumes a brilliant orangemarked-with-red coloring, a sharp and striking contrast to black berrylike fruit. In early spring numerous umbels of pure white Andromedalike flowers come, offering cheerymessages of spring. Albia Chinensis Grandiflora: Of exceedingly graceful habit is this small foundation shrub. Its shiny dark green foliage sets off to advantage the small white, lilac-tinted, heather-like flowers. It blooms un-tiringly throughout the summer and early fall and its foliage, hardy, inearly fall and its ionage, including trepid, stays on weeks after winter Cotoneasters: These lovely evergreens combine beautifully with the deciduous shrubs and are especially desirable on account of their grace-ful habit of growth, their neat everfull habit of growth, their neat ever-green foliage and gay fruits. Both the Francheti and the Horizontalis are charming species. The Francheti puts out long gracefully arched branches, foliaged light green, amongst which orange-yellow berries glow' warmly. The Horizontalis is low growing, dwarfish, of dark green foliage. In the autumn the leaves go crimson, scarlet fruits come, and there is satisfying color deep into the there is satisfying color deep into the aglow with rosy-crimson flowers. Verruculosa (Warty Barberry): A handsome spreading barberry with shiny-leaved foliage, light green above, glacous underneath, turning in winter rich red and bronze tones. Spring gives it bright yellow flowers, fall lustrous violet-black fruits. It is best planted in a protected place.

Hydrangea Arborescens Grandi-ora (Snowball Hydrangea): A hardy American shrub 4 to 8 feet tall; its leaves are bright green, a few sterile rays borne in numerous flat-topped clusters in early summer and lasting until fall.

Group 2 Hydrangea Paniculata Grandiflora is a charming shrub to set at the open corners of a low porch where there is not much distance between the floor of the porch and the ground, as it is not impatient at pruning and can be cut back to within three eyes of the previous season's growth. This, of course, should be done in the early spring. It is undoubtedly the most popular rt is undoubtedly the most popular variety of hydrangea and one of the showlest shrubs in cultivation. The great composite flower heads are built up of innumerable flat mar-ginal florets. When fully expanded the lacy panicles are snow-white but soon take on stunning tones of bronze on the exposed sides.

Dutzias Gracilis: A small shrub are interestingly rough on the upper surface.

Combinations

By using all of the above subjects and grouping them, preferably in a border of irregular outline and arranging them according to their habit of growth, surprisingly beautiful effects can be obtained.

Other bands, such as the Municipal Band of Valenca, take part in these annual events, not as competitors, and have a kind of tutelary effect on their local fellow artists. Many of these bands are famous in Spain and abroad; the Municipal or the Alabar-dero Band of Madrid; the Municipal Band of Barcelona, the Band of the Republican Guard of Paris, the best known bands from Lisbon and Rome. The benefit derived by the competitors at these fêtes is each time more marked and is seen both in the internal organization of the philharmonic societies and in the quality and variety of their repertory.

Growth of Taste

What has so pertinently been termed "la gran guitarra de Rossini" (the "great guitar" of Rossini) as applied to the rudimental orchestral conception usually associated with 122 Canal Street Italian operas of the first half of the nineteenth century, could also be applied to band music. In those days a style whose elements were the melody of one or more instruments against the background of an ordinary accompaniment was the rule. A cornet "solo," for example, easily won the local audience. Recent and beneficial artistic influences have abolished the regime of instrumental virtuosity in these bands, whose structure has been modified thanks to the purifying of taste and the sharpening of sensibility. This has been accomplished by adjustment to the essential contemporary demands of artistic evolution, which could not have made themselves felt without these instructive and inspiring com-

Pleasant excitement was provided at the outset by that now familiar experience, Sir Thomas Beecham's up-to-date version of Handel's "Mesby the juxtaposition of Hubert siah." As usual, the judicious were Parry's oratorio, "Job," and the first inclined to grieve; the critics, local part of Haydn's oratorio, "The Seaas well as metropolitan, assumed sons," heightened as it was by such their wonted tone of complaint and differences of musical treatment and reprimand. himself, therein, still to be, at line, with its pretty echo of rememheart, more the sonneteer, the word- brance: spinner and the satirist than the genuine dramatist of later years. This gracious comedy of the Court of Navarre, even in the revised form that Rosaline being Maid-of-Honor in which it has come down to us, still whose beauty and grace win, also contains twice as many rhymed lines as blank verses; it includes three quisitely graceful homage: sonnets and a song, and is inter-spersed as well with doggerel, with alternating rhymes and with six-lined stanzas. How crude it was, as a play, and yet how full of potential matter, none knew better than himself; for, later on, when a "mellowed occasion" called for such another court-comedy, its author, as was his way with immature work, went back to "Love's Labor's Lost," recasting line after line into his new fantasy, which he called "A Midsummer-Night's Dream," and substituting for the classical presentation, by Holo-fernes and his friends, of "The Nine Worthies," another burlesqued classical tragedy, done by six clowns, with Bottom, the weaver, replacing the schoolmaster, who, almost beyond was intended for none other than George Chapman, Shakespeare's rival poet of the earlier sonneteering days.

Chapman's name it is that gives the best clue to Shakespeare's intention in this comedy of "Love's Labor's Lost," which, at bottom, scarcely deserves the name of a stage play, but rather of a topical revue; its author relying, for his success, not upon plot, of which there is almost none, nor upon genuine characterization, of which there is very little. but upon lyric poetry, song, and dance, and, still more, upon verbal coruscations, and topical allusion, and satire-especially those two lastnamed, with which, in their most fanciful shapes, the scenes sparkle throughout. In those early days, when his genius was first blossoming into exuberant, and many-sided, vitality, young Shakespeare, with equal daring and delight, spares neither man nor woman, be they courtier, kitchen-maid, or queen. The wench, Jacquenetta, may be based upon some country servant-girl, track the dramatist once crossed; but when Costard exclaimed, for the first time (III:1), "O, marry me to one Frances," it is certain that a chuckle, or—if the Queen were not present in person—a loud laugh ran through an audience, that saw therein, at once, a jest at Majesty herself, whose negotiations, for the hand, in marriage, of Francis, Duke of Alençon, were a great topic at the English Court, just about the time wherein the beginnings of this comedy are set; in which connection It is pertinent also to remember that Armado's page, Moth, who takes part in the skipping dialogue, bears the name (La Mothe) of the French Am-bassador to London, officially charged with the marriage business. By means of what refining prohibitory laws, or by means of process does the Christ take away education and moral suasion, comes the sin of the world, when apparently from the universal longing for there is as much wickedness at one higher culture and refinement in time as at another? In Christian human ways, and from an individual Science we learn that it is a sense and innate desire to attain perfection of sin that needs to be taken away, and to understand God and spiritual and that evil is destroyed by the man. When the Psalmist observed understanding of God, good; that all the people of his time longing after sin and suffering are thus destroyed. and working for material pleasures, In "Science and Health with Key to he turned his thought to God and the Scriptures" (pp. 476, 477) Mrs. said, "As for me, I will behold thy Eddy says: "Jesus beheld in Science face in righteousness: I shall be the perfect man, who appeared to satisfied, when I awake, with thy him where sinning mortal man aplikeness." NEW YORK BOND MARKET OIL COMPANY MAY INCREASE ITS DIVIDEND

Closing Prices

Standard of Indiana May Give Consideration to Larger Extra

NEW YORK, Oct. 19—Standard Oil Company of Indiana directors are expected soon to give consideration to increasing the extra dividend. For some time it has been paying 62½ cents regular and 25 cents extra quarterly, and rumors are the extra may be increased to 50 cents:

Another rumor in the oil trade is that Indiana may also seek to acquire all voting stock of Pan American Petroleum & Transport Company. Through its 80 per cent ownership of Pan American Eastern Company, Indiana now controls 51 per cent of the 1,001,000 voting shares of Pan American Petroleum.

If such a plan were decided upon, Indiana would have to take in approximately 500,000 shares of Pan American. While wholly unofficial, expectation is that the offer will be one share of Indiana for each 1¼ shares of Pan American Petroleum.

of Indiana for each 14 shares of Pan American Petroleum. In addition to the A stock, Pan American has 2,360,694 shares of non-voting B common outstanding, based on its 1927 balance sheet, but current rumors do not specify whether this class of stock might be included in the arrangement.

Indiana has sufficient stock unissued to take care of such acquisition. At the end of 1927, there were 9.231,540 shares outstanding out of 15,000,000 authorized, leaving 5.700,000 to be issued at the directors' discretion.

Indiana, in line with other well-rounded oil units, has undoubtedly experienced improved earnings this way. perienced improved earnings this year. In 1927, a year of general depression in oil, it reported a balance of $3.26 a share, and 1928 results should better this by a good margin.

this by a good margin.

It is the largest refiner of gasoline in the world, and ranks as one of the biggest money makers in the Standard Oll group. Last year was the first in which it failed to earn its dividend requirements, showing a deficit of $1.-997,714 after payments of $32,130,170 to stockholders. In 1926 earnings equaled $6.03 a share, and surplus after dividends was $23,222.027.

At the end of 1927 earned surplus was $106,537,230 and capital surplus $70,313,636, or a total of $176,850,866. equal to 76 per cent of the $230,788,513 par value stock outstanding. The com-

FARMERS NEED AID OF FINANCE

Co-operative Marketing Opens Way for Partnership With Wall Street

OMAHA, Neb., Oct. 19-The interdependence of finance and agriculture and the value of security collateral and the value of security collateral loans to the country bank were among the outstanding subjects of an address delivered before the Nebraska Bankers Association in its annual convention at Omaha by E. H. H. Simmons, president of the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. Simmons declared that instead of being antagonistic to the interests of agriculture, eastern business and financial interests realized that prosperity in the farming sections of the perity in the farming sections of the Nation was necessary to full prosperity in the remainder of American business. After tracing the growth of the great western agricultural districts and linking their development to the construc-tion of railroad and manufacturing enterprises in the East, the speaker turned his attention to the call loan market, and declared that it has ren-dered for a long time an indirect but highly important service to American

Safety of Call Loans

"Today," he said, "the New York call loan market is undoubtedly the most highly organized security loan market in the world. For many years there has never been a single loss to a lender arising from a call loan made to a stock Exchange member, and based on the collateral of Stock Exchange securities. Thus call loans are unparalleled in their safety to our lenders, for the same safety has not been seen even with government bonds." Referring to the "sometimes unsus-

"Oftentimes western banks have been severely criticized for lending part of their funds in Wall Street on call. Local borrowers not unnaturally have asked why local deposits should be sent halfway across the continent to be lent in New York as long as they could possibly be employed in their

Lending Funds on Call

Tending Funds on Call

"An examination of interest rates in the agricultural districts and in New York over a periodi of years shows that as a rule the rates of interest on stock market loans are considerably below the interest rates charged by the local western banker on local loans.

"It can therefore scarcely be said that the local banker sends his money to lend in Wall Street in order to obtain a higher rate of interest.
"Another important restraint on the

"Another important restraint on the local banker to keep his funds working in his own community lies in the nature of the banking business. If the local banker by providing accommodation to local borrowers can build them up from small depositors to large depositors, the growth of his bank is sound and inevitable. When he sends his funds to Wall Street to lend on call he does not similarly assure himself of a growth in his own daposits. "The local banker therefore does "The local banker therefore does not lend money on call in Wall Street because of superior rates of interest there or because of special advantages in building up his institution. He makes these loans to preserve the liquidity and solvency of his own institution."

Ald to Agriculture Mr. Simmons then turned to the problem of financial aid for the farmer,

"The gradual development of co-operative marketing in this country," the speaker declared, "may sooner or later take the form of stock corpora-tions, and if it does, the way lies open through our established stock exchanges to direct capital into agricul SYSTEM STATEMENT ture just as in the past it has been directed into commerce and manufacturing.

Football Outlook for Golden Bears Is Better This Fall Than Last

BERKELEY, Calif. - The University of California football team successfully launched its campaign for cessfully launched its campaign for the Pacific Coast Conference championship last Saturday afternoon against State College of Washington at the California Memorial Stadium here, by winning 13 to 3, after having previously won games.

C. M. Price, coaching the California Bears for his third year, has the material for a much better team this year and will be out to make up for the defeats met with last year at the hands of the University of Southern California, Washington and Stanford. The sophomore stars, who last year came into their own in the Bears' post-season game with the University of Pennsylvania, form the nucleus of California's eleven this year, and, with one exception, the first eleven is composed of veterans. The only regular who was not on the squad last season is R. G. Avery '31, captain and end on the freshman team last year, and former star on the All-Western team in the Shriners' New Year's contest

Lom Triple-Threat Player In the backfield, Ben Lom '30 is In the backfield, Ben Lom '30 is proving to be the most valuable offensive player. He is a triple-threat man and does most of the punting and passing for the Bears. He has overcome most of the faults he displayed last year and Coach Price expects him to be the mainstay of his attack. Lom plays halfback, with S. L. Barr '30 as his running meta. Barr a heavier. his running mate. Barr, a heavier back, is also a triple-threat man and is a tower of strength for California on the defense. C. E. Among the other backfield men on the squad are half a score of likely sophomores, as well as half a dozen veterans from last year's squad. They are: H. R. Breakenridge '29, quarter-back; H. A. Bruno '30, halfback; Paul Clymer '29, halfback; J. E. Coffield '31, halfback; R. C. Ewing '29, halfback; C. T. Garrity '31, fullback; F. F. Gill '29, halfback; J. C. Hickingbotham '31, fullback; E. Von Tagen '30, fullback and end.

Clymer is a two-year veteran and one of Coach Price's best reserves. He alternates with Lom at halfback and is another triple-threat on the offense.

Line Appears Weakest

Line Appears Weakest

Coach Price's line, which threatens to be the weak spot in his team this year, is at least flanked by two of the leading ends on the coast. Capt. I. L. The latter played for two years with the San Francisco Olympic Club football team before registering at California.

LONDON, Eng.-The final of the English national inter-club speed As substitute ends, California has two promising juniors, R. B. Norton '30 and E. L. Thornton '30, while L. V. Brown '31 is another premising wing man. The other ends on the large Bear squad are O. O. Davis '29 and Von Tagen, who also plays in the backfield.

The tackle positions are both filled by veterans of two years on the team. F. M. Fitz '29, made over from a center last year, has been one of the stars of the Bear line in the practice games. S. G. Bancroft '29 played end last season and was shifted to the weak tackle position.

At guards, Coach Price faces a big problem. He is attempting to build a stone wall in the center of his line and has been trying four men at the two positions. At present, H. M. Gill '30 and Bert Schwarz. '29 are holding down the regular places. L. R. Pitto down the regular places. L. R. Pitto Manchester, which defeated them in Manchester with the sail.

Many rumors are going the rounds concerning which National Hockey League team will have David Trot-tier, star left wing of the Toronto Grads, on its lineup this coming season, with Toronto, Montreal Maroons and the Ottawa Senators mentioned most prominently, but little has been said about his coming to Boston.

The Bruins, according to authentic of the Toronto Grads. Trottier being one and Hugh Plaxton, big center, the other. Plaxton has promised to give Boston first consideration and Trottier has been signed over to Boston by J. C. Smythe, present manager of the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Smythe, according to information received, has first right to Trottier's services in professional hockey, but completed a proposition with Manager Arthur H. Ross of the Bruins whereby his rights to Trottier's services were automatically changed to ices were automatically changed to Boston. The whole affair has not been settled, by any means, but when the final reckoning takes place the Bruins will have much to say, if it is their desire to secure him.

Harris Is Appointed Manager of Detroit

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS Detroit, Mich. PPOINTMENT of Stanley R.

A Harris as manager of the Detroit American League baseball team, was announced today by Frank J. Navin, president of the local club. Harris, who led the Washington American League team to two pennants and a world's championship title, succeeds George J. Moriarty, whose resignation was announced this week. The length of the Harris contract and its finan-cial terms were withheld.

Part of the negotiations that bring Harris to Detroit involved the transfer of J. R. Warner, Detroit infielder, to the Washington club. Harris said he would be in uniform daily, but would play on the Tiger team only in emer-

FINDING a new avenue of service, many Rotary Clubs and similar organizations have brought much happiness to the children of their communities in providing outings for hem. A happy occasion of this kind is related in a contribution from Mrs. M. G. G. of Red Deer, Alberta, Can. Economy and Expansion

CPEAKING yesterday at the dedication of the Fredericksburg and Spottsylvania County Battle Fields Memorial, President Coolidge almost casually refuted the imputation recently made that the claim in behalf of his administration that it had effected appreciable economies is deceptive if not actually false. The President rightly takes it for granted that the American people have approved the program of industrial expansion upon which the country has entered during the last decade. They regard as deposits to their credit the public funds invested in permanent highways, in inland waterways for the transportation of the products of farms and factories, and similarly the money paid in liquidation of the national debt. It is because of this that they are quick to question the sincerity of one who, knowing the facts, consciously seeks to deceive or mislead the uninformed.

President Coolidge, while refraining from any discussion of political or partisan issues, stated that in the last ten years there have been built in the United States 72,000 miles of improved highways and many miles of substantial bridges. The total estimated cost of these improvements, according to the figures quoted by him, is $1,439,000,000, of which the Federal Government has paid $633,000,000. To this he adds several hundreds of millions paid by the national Government for improvements and extensions of inland waterways.

The beneficiaries of these improved systems of travel and transportation, country-wide in their extent, will be slow to charge those who have been responsible for this policy of expansion with wastefulness or improvidence. They, like all other reasonable persons, will realize that the economical expenditure of money for those facilities and utilities which reduce the costs of transportation is neither wasteful nor extravagant. In making up the national balance sheet the sums so invested fall naturally upon the credit side of the ledger.

While the President's incomplete array of figures is convincing and conclusive in a degree, it remained for Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, to supply complete refutation of the charge that actual economies have not resulted during the Coolidge Administration. Mr. Mellon directed himself specifically to the statements made by Governor Smith, the Democratic candidate, in his speech delivered at Sedalia, Mo., on Tuesday. His defense is interosed not only in his own behalf, but in behalf of his undersecretary, Ogden L. Mills, and General Lord, Director of the Budget. All three were personally arraigned by Governor Smith on the charge of carrying on a deliberate campaign of misrepresentation.

Secretary Mellon, at the outset, observes that "economy is not just saving, but wise spending; the elimination of waste; the promotion of efficiency and businesslike methods; the building up of a sense of responsibility to the tax-payer on the part of public servants; the careful management of the Government's finances, by a policy of steady debt reduction with consequent relief from the heavy burden of interest charges." From this he argues, and with sound logic, that under such a definition expenditures might actually increase from year to year and yet the Nation receive an economical and businesslike administration of its public affairs.

Every business executive and plant manager in the United States realizes that the cost of profitable and efficient operation in business and industry is increasing year by year. But these business men do not regard expenditures thus made as wasteful or improvident. Neither do they regard derisively the practical economies which contribute, even in a small way, in keeping down the mounting overhead. Mr. Mellon, in commenting on so-called Coolidge economies, now practiced in all departments of the Government, may perhaps remind the New York Governor of the observation made by an illustrious predecessor who attained the Presidency, that "public office is a public trust."

Yet Mr. Mellon proceeds to show that despite the economic expenditure of sums necessary for public improvements, to say nothing of the vast totals appropriated for the care and relief of veterans of the World War, the burden borne by taxpayers has been appreciably lightened. But Mr. Mellon does not attribute to his critic a desire to misrepresent or falsify the facts. He is considerate enough and charitable enough to concede to him the benefit of misconception or misunderstanding. The Governor declared that the charges made by him comprised an indictment from which he had nothing to subtract or deduct.

"Drinking Children"

TODAY, as of yore, parents have a responsibility. There is an enemy of their children abroad—an enemy shorn of much of its power, but still lurking in dark corners. Liquor, even under prohibition, remains liquor, the old enemy. Its indulgence leads to disaster today, as formerly. Example and education are weapons in the hands of parents against it; but there is another, and sometimes neglected, weapon: parental authority.

A vacillating attitude on the part of parents toward youthful indulgence; self-justification for a lack of authority, based upon the so-called modern revolt against discipline; halfway positions regarding obedience to the laws of the land; open criticism of the law, which young ears are all too prone to catch and adopt; too great a willingness to leave the moral and ethical instruction of children to teachers and preachers and soap-box orators, rather than to the friendly family intercourse about the hearthstone—all these are typical of the ways in which well-intentioned but thoughtless parents sometimes evade their responsibilities.

And, in extenuation for the grave offense against the youth of today either willingly or unknowingly perpetrated by such grown-ups as shirk their parental duties, let no one presume to assert that the law, which is designed to free the fathers and mothers of America from the sad spectacle of drinking children, is responsible for the degradation of young people who are not taught to respect that law.

As Daniel A. Poling, president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, recently recommended, "Let those of us who are older stop slandering America's sons and daughters, and, while we watch our own steps, give to them a good example and the inspiration of our confidence."

Out of their great love for their children, responsible parents exercise proper authority over their children for the protection of their children.

The Southern Democrats

THE embattled Democrats of the once Solid South are to be congratulated. Weeks ahead of the actual election they have demonstrated their power by compelling a Democratic presidential nominee, for practically the first time since the Civil War, to turn his attention to their territory and to carry to such states as Virginia, North Carolina and Tennessee his appeal for support. The opinion is widespread that some states of this once politically impregnable region will this year break away from their ancient allegiance to the Democratic Party by repudiating the candidate who started the fashion by bolting the Democratic platform. But even should this not be true, what has already been accomplished gives assurance that the "Solid South," in the sense in which that phrase has been used in the past, is no more. Never again will a coalition of representatives of the Tammanies and imitation Tammanies of the northern states dare to force upon the protesting South a nominee offensive in every particular. Never again will the phrase be heard before a Democratic national convention, "the South'll take what we offer. It will have to!" Already the independent, clear-thinking men in practically every state of the South have made their determination to resist so vocal and so terrifying to the northern oligarchy which has seized upon the party, that the Smith leaders are employing every form of political cajolery and coercion to coax or to force them back into line. When in the memory of living man has the Democratic National Committee found it necessary to send money to states like Virginia, North Carolina, or Florida? When did the northern Democrats before this year find it expedient to put a southern man on the presidential ticket? When, prior to 1928, has the South had the opportunity to listen to a Democratic candidate for President pleading for its votes?

Hitherto the support of the southern states has been taken as a fact assured at the start. The common phrase has been that its people would vote for a yellow dog on the Democratic ticket. But now, even in Texas, the proportions of the revolt against the nominee who stands for the repudiation of the party's record on so vital an issue as prohibition have put the State in jeopardy. As for such commonwealths as Alabama, North Carolina and Florida, where the growing independence of opinion within Democratic ranks has long been apparent, the candidate and the issues of this campaign bid fair to destroy the old-time Democratic majorities.

It is rather a desperate errand Smith has undertaken in crossing the Mason and Dixon's Line in search of support. And some of those who accompanied him on his recent visit to the dry states of the middle West are not inclined to think that his new adventure will result in much profit to his candidacy.

British Columbia's Open Door

THE new provincial administration of British Columbia is reported to be exploring land areas throughout the Province available for settlement. According to Premier Tolmie of British Columbia, plans are being prepared for co-operation with British authorities to place groups of settlers from Great Britain in suitable farming districts.

Under the Empire Settlement Act, passed by the British Parliament in 1922, an annual appropriation of £3,000,000 for a period of fifteen years is available to assist British families to settle on land in the dominions. Canada has benefited by this appropriation, particularly in carrying out a plan for the settlement of 3000 families on farms owned by the Dominion Government. With the Dominion treasury sharing in the cost, advances have been made to settlers for a twenty-five-year period with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. The actual settlement work has been administered entirely by Canadian authorities, and official reports indicate that the British settlers for the most part are succeeding admirably. British-born settlers seem to have done equally as well as Canadianborn on any class of land, whether improved or unimproved.

Since Lord Lovat, British Undersecretary of State for the Dominions, visited Canada during the recent summer months, the report has been current that plans are being considered for an extension of the settlement project to place another 20,000 British families on the land. Capital for initial settlement purposes, including the cost of erection of buildings, clearing and development of land, purchase of stock and equipment, would be furnished by the British Treasury. Supervision and general administration of the plan in Canada would be carried out by the thoroughly competent land settlement branch of the Department of Immigration and Colonization. The provinces would participate by making available suitable land for settlement. British Columbia evidently is getting ready to make an early bid for British families under the proposed plan. The British authorities have satisfied themselves that there are many suitable districts in the Pacific coast province within reasonable distance of railways and markets. Systematic settlement of Canada with British families would be mutually beneficial to the Dominion and to the United Kingdom.

Italy's Influence in the Balkans.

TTALY is steadily and surely increasing her influence and power in the Balkan peninsula. She is unceasingly scoring victories over her chief rival in that part of the world, France. The Tirana pact between Albania and Italy, signed nearly two years ago, and later followed by a supplementary agreement between the two countries, was a decided gain for Rome. The ratification of the Nettuno agreements by the Parliament at Belgrade during the month of August this year was another step forward for Italy and consolidated her position along the Dalmatian coast, which is part of Jugoslavia. The conversion of the Republic of Albania into a monarchy, with Ahmed Zogu, Italy's protégé, as King, was another point for Mr. Mussolini. Likewise, the outcome of the recent cabinet crisis in Bulgaria, as a result of which General Vulkoff remains as Minister of War, is unquestionably to the advantage of Italy. General Vulkoff is friendly to the Macedonians, who are very close to Italy. His remaining in the Bulgarian Cabinet is very advantageous to Italian interests. It is plain that the influence of Italy in Bulgaria is growing.

One of the cardinal points of difference between Italy and France is the question of who shall dominate the Balkans. France backs Jugoslavia; Italy backs Albania and Bulgaria, and to a certain extent Greece and Turkey. In this international game of great importance for the whole of Europe, Italy is doing most of the scoring at present.

RCHESTRAL audiences: which one of all that may be enumerated can claim the highest rating? This question supersedes, perhaps, that which used to be asked, Which orchestra stands first? More explicitly, which of the many groups of subscribers that support symphony concerts in Europe and America shows the keenest discernment for good performance and interpretation; and exerts, accordingly, the strongest influence on the conductor, to build up his powers, and on the players, to improve their technical mastery?

In America, the inquiry presents itself with especial force just now, when people are reassembling in their places in auditoriums, to learn what Beethoven and Schubert have to say from the standpoint of 100 years ago, and what Strauss and Respighi have to tell them from that of today. By opinion of one sort, the effect of the telling depends for the larger part upon the talent and disposition of a man who makes motions with a baton, and for the remaining part upon the discipline and acquiescence of men who draw a bow up and down across strings, or who blow into a tube of wood through a reed, or of brass through a mouthpiece. By other judgment, the composer's message secures publication in no such merely objective manner and from no such purely mechanistic source.

To consider origins, wherever sound may have been elicited, anciently, from the hollow of a gourd, from the stem of an oat-straw or from the coiled chamber of a conch-shell, it became music only when it struck upon someone's ears and awoke someone's sensibilities. In the glow of the hearth, in the shade of the beech tree or in the sun and wind of the strand, there had to be persons listening. Then, to come to an era of perfected instruments, affairs cannot, after all, have essentially changed. Though a trained executant playing the violin, the oboe or the horn takes the place of the witless vagabond who filled hut, grove and cove with primitive tone, music is something craved by the hearer. rather than something imposed by the performer.

Solo airs or elaborately organized sonorities, music is called out of the silences here to a greater purpose, there to a smaller. Orchestrally, where does it happen with the most significance in the United States—Philadelphia. New York, Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Minneapolis, San Francisco or Los Angeles? If the community to which the honors ought to go could by fair process be indicated, if the audience of highest rating could, without displeasure anywhere, be pointed out, then at once might be named also the group of symphonic artists that stands Number One.

Random Ramblings

An educator figures that a college education is worth $72,000, but the trouble with most young graduates is that they expect to go out and earn at least 6 per cent on the investment at once.

Thomas A. Edison—An Appreciation

THIS month of October, 1928, marks the forty-ninth anniversary of the invention of the incandescent lamp. Coming abreast of such a milestone along its crowded path, a preoccupied world pauses to express its gratitude to that man without whom modern conditions of progress would seem to have been impossible of attainment.

Thomas A. Edison has commonly been referred to as a "wizard," and so he has appeared to the uninitiated. Yet men have too easily imagined that this "wizard" worked his astonishing works with the effortless gesture of a Jupiter grasping in his first the thunderbolts of heaven. On the contrary, Mr. Edison's accomplishments are the fruits of his energy, combined with his genius. An early episode of his career sounds the keynote for all the busy years to follow.

One day when, a young man, he was working as a telegraph operator in Boston, Mr. Edison bought at a second-hand bookshop a complete set of Michael Faraday's books on electricity. A companion of those days, called Adams, has described how Edison reached their lodging with the books at four o'clock in the morning, read steadily through the remainder of the night, then ran all the way to his breakfast in Hanover Street, a mile away. "Adams," he panted, "I have got so much to do, and life is so short, that I am going to hustle."

It is from this standpoint precisely that Mr. Edison has carried on his experiments. He possesses an enormous capacity for work. He has labored incessantly and has expected his fellows to keep pace with him. On one occasion, when he and his men had a particularly large and demanding order to fill in a short time, he is said to have locked the men into a room for sixty hours. As for himself, he has indulged in no hobbies and few holidays; he can do with remarkably little sleep; his rest has been found in change of work. Nothing has been permitted to divert him from his stupendous tasks on behalf of an unheeding world.

The boy Edison went to school for only a few weeks. Much he learned from his mother, even more he learned from books. He has had an insatiable appetite for learning, combined with the faculty of knowing how to find things out for himself. And whatever he learned he put immediately to the test. One of his biographers, George S. Bryan, records that, not many years ago, Mr. Edison laughed boyishly as he exclaimed: "Say, I have been mixed up in a whole lot of things, haven't I?"

Anecdotes of his early career are striking in their virility, whether he is shown as a market gardener, aged eleven years; as a newsboy selling 1500 papers on credit just after the Battle of Pittsburgh Landing; as a young investigator setting up his laboratories in his mother's cellar or in the baggage car of the train on which he sold his papers; or as an expert telegraph operator whose speed and accuracy were altogether amazing.

No matter where young Edison was, nor what he was doing, he had time and energy to perfect such instruments as he was using. He could never leave off experimentation, for he was convinced that people should be enabled to do their work more quickly and more easily. Sometimes his experiments brought him recognition, more often not; his employers had not his vision and, naturally, they thought the young man was wasting their time and his own.

Mr. Edison was still a young man, only twenty-six, when he found himself at the head of an experimental laboratory at Newark, N. J., where he was directing 300 men along such lines of research as he pointed out. Thus, comparatively early, he had come into his own. In 1876

his laboratory was moved to Menlo Park, N. J., then again in 1887 to West Orange. Startling discoveries followed close upon each other's heels. At one time, in the Newark laboratory, forty-five of Mr. Edison's inventions were being developed together. Always he could turn from one to another freely, without delay in mental adjust-

Taking it by and large, more time and more study entered into the invention of the electric light than into any other single task. Mr. Edison has maintained that, with reference to the incandescent lamp, he never made an actual discovery, that his contribution was invention pure and simple. For he took what others had worked out, improved upon it, perfected the processes, utilized and adapted to his own purposes whatever knowledge had been established by others. In the end, the results had been made his own. It was, then, after some thirteen months of ceaseless experimentation and the expenditure of $40,000 that at last one of his lamps continued at incandescence for forty hours. It happened on Oct. 21, 1879.

On the following New Year's Eve was held that famous public exhibition at Menlo Park, for which special trains carried from New York City about 3000 incredulous spectators. One and all stood gaping at the sight of a multitude of tiny brilliant lights, suspended on wires which were stretched between branches of the trees. Many were those who applauded; many who scoffed. Mr. Edison was little moved by these evidences of their sentiments, for he alone realized how much there was to be done before his invention could be perfected for the market

Any man in the street can enumerate the inventions which are owed to the genius of Thomas A. Edison, though indeed a person might omit certain of them through sheer familiarity. It is comparatively safe to credit them all to Mr. Edison. For between June, 1869, and June, 1910, he applied for 1328 patents, that is to say, one patent for every eleven days. During the Great War he made many inventions at the instigation of the Government, and he is still at work at West Orange. He is just as absorbed in his task today as he was when, summoned to the City Hall for the payment of certain back taxes, he took his place obediently in the line, but could not remember his name. He is just as delighted with the results of his labors as when he carried the first phonograph triumphantly into the offices of the Scientific American.

Think of the motion picture—of what it means alone in the field of education. Think of the electric railways and the electric power stations everywhere. Think of the typewriter and the dietaphone. Contrast two photographs of Broadway, New York City, in 1890 and today, if you would understand what it means to have electric wires underground. And what may we not expect even yet from the mentality of such a man? If Mr. Edison is "the most useful American," as he has been called, it is first of all because of his unselfish desire to benefit humankind. Only a short time ago he said: "I haven't any conclusions to give; I am just learning about things myself."

President Coolidge, upon this notable anniversary, is delivering to Mr. Edison a message of congratulation by radio from Washington. What emotions must this circumstance alone not arouse in Mr. Edison's thought! The voice of the President swiftly ringing across all those empty miles! It is for just such a possibility as this that he has offered his years of patient labor. Consistently he has dealt not with things, but with thoughts; he has striven untiringly to facilitate the transmission of human thoughts.

From the World's Great Capitals—Paris

N ASTONISHING question has been posed: In the course of 200 years, has England moved farther away from the Continent of Europe? Is the English Channel widening? There are skeptics. On the other hand, then, if this is not the case, the precision of astronomical instruments must have increased during that time, for Paris has just been found to be five meters farther away from London than the distance established in the reign of Louis XIV. The bureau des longitudes of the French Government, by calculations made with the aid of stars, has now stated that the difference of longitude Paris-Greenwich is not 9 minutes 20 and 93-hundredths seconds, but instead 9 minutes 20 and 95-hundredths seconds. This correction of two-hundredths of a second adds some five meters to the distance between the Paris observatory and the initial meridian of Greenwich.

La Rue du Chat-qui-Pêche is the narrowest street in Paris, and none will dispute it. A thinner little street would surely be difficult to find; this one, near the Seine, slips between walls scarcely an arms' width apart. Its name is quaint enough, too, to give it notoriety: Street of the Cat Who Fishes-which leads us to say that Paris is a city of many quaintly named streets. The Street of the Wooden Sword, the Street of the Four Sons, the Street of the Three Crowns, The Street of the Ladies' Tower, Street of the Swan, Equality Street, Felicity Street, Street of the Festivals, Street of the Feuillantines (a kind of light pastry), Street of the Mule's Pace, Street of the Wolf's Breach, Street of the Flowered Basket, Street of the Quails' Mound, Passage of the Monkeys, and the Street of the Summit of the Alps are among the street names which both Parisian and foreign visitors remark with amusement or questioning.

On a hill in Lorraine, exposed to the four winds, has been erected a monument to Maurice Barrès, the great writer. He it was who before the war did most to keep before French thought the conviction that Alsace and Lorraine were inseparably a part of France. During the war he served with his pen the cause of the indivisibility of French unity. Apart, therefore, from the charm of his writing, Maurice Barrès represents to French people the illustrious example of a man devoted to the country from which he sprung. The hill is called "La Colline Inspirée," after the book of that title. "Les Déracinés" and "Colette Baudoche" were other books which strove especially, and with consummate strength and lyrical beauty, to keep burning the French fires in the hearths of Alsace and Lorraine.

American women have undertaken the restoration of a quaint house of the sixteenth century which stands in the town of Châtillon-sur-Seine. It is an exceptionally fine example of the architecture of that period The house is to become a place where Roman relies unearthed in the neighborhood will be exhibited. For years excavations have been undertaken by an eminent archæologist, M. Lorimy, and his discoveries have aroused much interest in this country. So rich was his field of work and so carefully has he pursued his labors, that it is claimed this house at Châtillon will eventually be unique in its collection of Roman objects left on Gallic soil.

At this autumn time, when the leaves on the trees are turning gold, the forest is a thing of magnificence. A poet has demanded that placards be posted in Paris reminding the public that such a wonder of nature is to be seen in this or that forest not far from the city. This prompted an adjoining announcement from a leading newspaper that the "Association nationale et industrielle du bois" had taken the decision to organize woodland festivals before winter came. According to ancient Gallic tradition, the forest is a holy thing. The effort, therefore, will be to recall to parents and children the beauty and usefulness of trees and the need of caring for them and perpetuating them. This is all part of a movement of reforestation. Trees were ruthlessly cut down during the war, and new forests are much needed in this country.

1 1 1 An art critic of Paris, familiar not only with the Louvre Museum, but also with the National Gallery in London, has made a comment on the care of paintings which is worth noting. He has observed how much cleaner those of London are than those of Paris. This was due, he remarked, to the custom in the former capital of covering the pictures with glass so as to isolate them completely from contact with the outer air. You will notice at the Louvre, on the other hand, that only a few paintings are protected this way, such as, for example, the "Mona Lisa" of Leonardo da Vinci. Works do seem to deteriorate and darken much too rapidly in the Louvre and many today are in need of cleaning. The use of glass, at least on all the smaller paintings, would, in the opinion of this critic, check this process of loss of original coloring.

One of the outstanding characteristics of the French people is their sense of humor. No one lives among them ong without being impressed with the procession of festivals held each year and with the manifest joy of the populace in them. One of the strangest and most amusing of these has just taken place; it is called the Fêtes des Caf' Con'-abbreviated from "cafés concerts"which are the concerts given in rollicking mood on the inpretentious stages of cafés. Music-hall artists, chorus girls, midinettes, and saleswomen took part in the show, which was held in the open at the Buffalo Vélodrome. Races were run, circus turns were given, and donkeys were ridden. The participants were free to clothe themselves as they wished, and some of the costumes, especially for the races, were exceedingly incongruous. Large crowds gathered to watch this typically French buffoonery.

Mrs. Willebrandt's Speeches To The Christian Science Monitor:

No clear thinker can accuse Mrs. Willebrandt of religious prejudice in her recent clean-cut speeches before certain Methodist and Presbyterian conferences. Nowadays the place where an address is delivered is of little consequence, since all the world hears it or reads it. She makes it perfectly plain that she is opposed to Governor Smith's candidacy, not because of his religion, but because he is sachem of Tammany Hall and a friend of liquor—two negative forces which always have typifed, and always will typify corruption and low ideals.

typified, and always will typify, corruption and low ideals. Who is better qualified than Mrs. Willebrandt to speak on this subject? Is she not Assistant Attorney-General, in charge of prohibition enforcement? On several occasions she has discovered how difficult it is to enforce the law in hostile territory like New York City, where Tammany Hall does not want the law enforced. Let us also remember that there is now a law in New York State which, in effect, will not permit of any state aid in enforcing the dry law and throws the whole burden on the federal authorities. Governor Smith and Tammany were strongly behind this section.

Therefore Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt is speaking—as the head of the prohibition enforcement department should—to defend the Eighteenth Amendment against the strongest assault that has yet been made upon it, against its greatest foe, lest, by a lack of alertness, this man should be elected to the position from which he could overthrow all the good work of the last ten years. Now is the time for decisive speech and action to protect this great work and to promote the success of this noble "moral experiment," as some are pleased to call it.

Should the Republican campaign headquarters muzzle Mrs. Willebrandt for being too outspoken? I sincerely hope not. She expresses herself splendidly, and tells the truth

I have been a Democrat all my life, but I am not going to vote for Smith.
